

BIG CROWD GREET HON. W. J. BRYAN AT OPERA HOUSE TODAY

THREE TIMES CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES GUEST OF JANES-VILLE THIS AFTER-NOON.

GATHERING OF CLANS

Hundreds of Democrats From Every Part of County Here to Receive
"Silver-Tongued Orator."

Hon. William Jennings Bryan, three times the nominee of the democratic party for the presidency of the United States, was the guest of Janesville this afternoon and was greeted by a great crowd of friends and admirers who had come from all parts of the county.

Col. Bryan arrived in this city from Chicago at 2:40 this afternoon via the Chicago and Northwestern railroad. He was met at the station by three auto loads of prominent democrats including: Ex-Congressman

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

Wolson, Milwaukee; A. H. Moehlenpaul, Clinton; Oscar Jensen, Edgerton; Frank Morse, Milton Junction; County Chairman E. H. Connel, P. J.
Moore, J. J. Cunningham of Janesville.

There was a large crowd gathered at the depot and Mr. Bryan was cheered enthusiastically as he stepped from the train. He was hurried to the official automobile and taken at once to the Myers opera house, where hundreds of his followers and admirers had been awaiting him since one o'clock.

In addition to the reception committee there were forty or more other democrats seated on the stage and Mayor John C. Nichols acted as chairman of the meeting.

Col. Bryan had planned to arrive here at twelve o'clock today but he missed connections in Chicago and consequently the city was robbed of three hours which would have been accorded them otherwise by their distinguished guest.

Mr. Bryan had planned to take dinner at the Grand hotel with some of his friends and his associates who were with him on his Wisconsin tour.
A reception was then planned at two o'clock and his address was to have been given at this time.

Mr. Bryan is scheduled to speak to the university students at Madison this evening and will leave Janesville at 4:25 this afternoon for the Capital City, which allowed his barely an hour and a half's visit in Janesville.
On account of this abbreviated stay he did not visit the auto show at the rink as had been previously planned in the arrangements.

Sunday Col. Bryan will be the guest of the Liberatorians in Milwaukee and will deliver several addresses at various St. Patrick's day meetings.

Col. Bryan appeared well and cheerful as usual in spite of the past twenty campaigns which he has weathered. His gentle smile and hearty hand-grip, together with his sincere word of greeting, which has won him so many friends, was in evidence as ever. He seemed ready for the coming strenuous days of the 1912 campaign.

Mr. Bryan in his speech this afternoon said that the democratic party had reason for encouragement because of the ideas which it has stood and fought for during the past twenty years which have been finally adopted in spite of the fact that the republican party was not in power, but held the office.

He outlined some of the things which the democratic party had stood for, including the election of United States Senators by the people which he said, was the most important of the present day reforms. He emphasized the matter of the presidential primary and said the time was ripe for their establishment.

He spoke eloquently of the efforts of the party to purify politics by publicity of the campaign funds and pointed to the victory which they had acquired in the law passed at the present session of Congress requiring the publication of the campaign expenses before the election.

He hit at the newspapers and stated that there should be publicity as to their ownership. If trusts, or railroads or municipal franchised corporations own newspapers, the public should know so that they may interpret what they say to the people in the true light.

A second thing that was encouraging to the democratic party said Mr.
Bryan, was the present division in the republican party. "Do you know out here," he said, "that there has been a falling-out between Roosevelt and Taft? I feared that that historic friendship was so close that it could not last. And I feared that when Mr.
Taft was presented to the American people in a dual character, as a whooping in the west and a put-on in the east, he was foredoomed to failure."

FIRST PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY IN NORTH DAKOTA TUESDAY

Much Interest Exhibited in Trial Of Innovation in American Politics.
La Follette's Chances At Stake.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Bismarck, N. D., March 15.—North Dakota promises to monopolize the center of the political stage next Tuesday, when a State-wide primary will be held to give the voters of both the leading parties an opportunity to express their preference for candidates for the presidential nomination. The primary will be the first of its kind ever held in any of the States and will mark an important innovation in American politics.

The idea of the presidential preference primaries is an outgrowth of the direct election plan which originated in Oregon several years ago.
The plan in this State next week will afford the first demonstration of how the idea works out in practice. The theory on which the scheme is based is generally conceded to be sound by the politicians of all parties. It is the theory that the delegates who place in nomination men for the highest offices in the land should represent the people directly, and not merely the politicans.
The direct elections will do away with the conventions, which heretofore have been held for the selection of delegates to the national conventions, and, it is believed, will insure the carrying out of the popular will,
with no misadventures due to the political manipulation.

In addition to North Dakota, the States which will try out the primary plan this year in the selection of the whole or a part of their delegations to the national conventions include
New York, Wisconsin, Illinois, Nebraska, Michigan, California, Oregon,
Ohio, New Jersey, and South Dakota.
If the results of the plan work out as its supporters anticipate, and there are found to be no counterbalancing bad effects from the new law, it is safe to say that by 1916 the direct primary system will be adopted by practically all of the States.

The North Dakota primaries, however, possess an interest that is of more direct importance to the politicians for the time being than anything that concerns the theoretical aspect of the new law. Upon the results of the popular vote to be cast by two aspirants for the republican presidential nomination—Theodore Roosevelt and Robert La Follette, of the two, the chances of La Follette are most vitally concerned. If La Follette should sweep the State, the result would be a temporary setback for the Roosevelt boom. On the other hand, it is conceded on all sides that a pronounced Roosevelt victory would sound the death-knell of the La Follette candidacy, for it has been claimed all along that the La Follette brand of progressivism has taken deeper root in North Dakota than in any other State and that the Wisconsin senator has had proportionately a larger number of supporters
among the Republicans of North Dakota than were to be found in his home State.

The campaign which practically closed today has been strenuously conducted on both sides. Many of the best speakers in the Roosevelt and La Follette camps have been stump-ing the State from end to end the past two weeks. The end of the fight finds the Roosevelt managers brimful of confidence in the result. They undoubtedly believe that the former President will sweep the State. One of the principal grounds for their belief is found in the fact that Colonel Roosevelt is known in North Dakota better than he is in most States, for he lived on a ranch there for years.

The La Follette managers are anxious for the weather of a primary which depends upon it in the rural districts. The La Follette forces contend that the rural vote will be strong for the Wisconsin senator.
The Roosevelt boosters, on the other hand, say they have nothing to fear on that score.

Taft's name will appear on the primary ballot, but the friends of the President long ago decided to make no action fight here. It is the only State they are willing to concede to the "insurgents" without a struggle.
The President has many friends here, but there are many Republicans

GOOD CROWD TODAY AT BIG AUTO SHOW; KEEP OPEN SUNDAY

MANAGEMENT EXTENDS TIME OF SHOW TO GIVE ALL AMPLE OPPORTUNITY TO ATTEND.

BEST SHOW IN STATE

Scores of Visitors as Well as Dealers Here Pronounce Show as Good as Milwaukee Exhibit in Many Respects.

Janesville's big auto show continued in full swing today and was favored with the largest attendance of the three days. The growing interest which has been shown and the fact that the weather Thursday and Friday was not the best to encourage attendance, has led the management to extend the time of the show over tomorrow.

There are many people in the city who do not realize what a really fine exhibit there is at the rink. All who have attended have been agreeably surprised and expressions of admiration are heard on every side by enthusiastic visitors.

"It is simply great," said one admirer, "and I don't suppose the dealers here could get out such a fine showing although I expected they would have a good one. We certainly have them to thank for placing Janesville on the map as a motor center."

Similar expressions were heard on all sides. Mr. Moore, editor of the Wisconsin Material, published at Milwaukee and the principal automobile organ of the state, has been at the show for the entire three days and is much pleased with the work of the dealers at the show.

"It is unquestionably the best show in the state outside of Milwaukee," he said. "The Cadillac, Madison, Stevens, Buick and New London shows were all fine and were well supported, but Janesville has really given a better exhibit than any of them, both in number of cars and in the beauty of the decorations and the general attractions of the whole affair."

"It will certainly put this city on the map as one of the big automobile centers of the south-western and southern parts of the state. There is no doubt but that the sale of cars in this section will be greatly increased as a result."

P. C. Driehs, representing the United States Tire company is attending the show. He is a veteran in the tire business and has attended all the national and state shows this season. He declared that the decorations, especially were the best he had seen in a show in a town of this size. He stated that the business prospects were flattering.

George M. Decker, F. H. Burton, E. A. Kemmerer and all of the dealers were pleased with the showing. "We might have had bigger crowds Thursday and Friday," said one of the men today, "but the weather was certainly unfavorable. With that fact we should be pleased that the affair has drawn such a good attendance."

Another dealer stated that he believed that the show was ahead of the Milwaukee exhibition in many respects, in regard to the decorations particularly. Then in the number of the moderate and lower priced cars exhibited the local show ranks well up with larger affairs held in this state and elsewhere.

"Business prospects are very good as a result of the show," said another dealer this morning. "People are interested in motor cars as they never have been before and we will probably double our sales this season."

The number of people who have been attracted from the neighboring cities and towns is gratifying to the dealers. In addition to numerous sales which have been made, the prospects have been increased to a large extent and many visitors have stated that they are seriously considering purchases.

The present indications are that the local dealers will form a county association in the near future. Mr. Moore declared that it was the plan of the state association to form local societies which will work in co-operation with them. The local dealers, he said would do well for their own interests in forming such an organization.

Mr. Cullen, of Janesville, you can't afford to miss this show. It will pay you for your time twice over to spend an hour there tonight or tomorrow, even if you have no intention of buying a car this season. The show is a rare treat for many people in the industry and enterprise of the local auto merchants. They have gone to a large expense shouldered entirely by themselves to make this event the best of its kind and they have succeeded.

The three Chinows, one of the Ford, one of the Cadillac, and one of the Planders, are drawing special attention. They were expressed here from New York especially for this exhibition and are three models which appeared at the New York show.

They give a remarkable opportunity to see the mechanism of the cars. The number of Milwaukee men at the show is a matter of remark. They all are congratulating the Janesville dealers on the success of their undertaking and urge them to keep up the good work by organizing and by making the show an annual event. Among the out of town men in the city for the show were:

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

The would-be mayor in his so-called "Facts About Re-assessment," states "That this re-assessment was made upon the decision of the state tax commission, a commission of experts maintained by the state."

I wish to take serious exception to the use of the word expert.

The old tax commission consisting of Messrs. Gilson, Curtis and Langston were experts in the true sense of the word. They were masters of the whole field of taxation and were recognized as such throughout the United States.

In an address about a year since, "Tax Commissioner" T. A. Polleya of Minnesota said: "When the first of May arrives and Judge Gilson and Mr. Curtis lay down the duties of their high positions, the state of Wisconsin will have released from its official service two of the most highly qualified taxation experts in the country."

On May 1st, 1911, Mr. Curtis' term expired and Prof. T. E. Adams, a professor of political economy, was appointed to fill the position.

An expert is one who possesses skill derived from practice. The best one could say of this theorist is that he was an amateur. That is, he had cultivated the study of taxation without practicing the same.

Judge Gilson resigned and T. Lyons, an attorney, was appointed to fill the vacancy and no one but the author of the "Dope Sheet" ever claimed that Mr. Lyons was or is an expert.

Did these so-called experts appoint experts to reassess the property of the city of Janesville? If so, in and out of the time that an expert is one who possesses skill derived from practice and that the only way to learn a business is in the business. Let us call the roll and see.

L. P. Gerard, who assessed the factory buildings; W. U. Freeman who assessed the machinery, and J. E. Dutton of Kenosha, who worked only a short time, were the only experts engaged in the re-assessment. C. C. Mans, F. H. Snyder, F. A. Taylor, F. A. Crocker, and H. V. Cowles were all novices in the work. That is to say that they had never been engaged in the practical work of assessing property.

Cowles have been engaged as assessors of the tax commission to check up sales of property in the state. That work surely does not make an expert assessor of one who has to place a value on all kinds and classes of property. Yet this so-called expert tax commission appointed Mr. Cowles an income assessor for Dane county notwithstanding an expert had applied for the position. So much for dreams and visions of theory and political economy.

Now what could any sane man expect as a result of the efforts of novices and amateurs who reassessed Janesville? Why, just what we got, viz: More of the property assessed for much more than it is worth. Some property for much less than it is worth. A large amount omitted from the roll. Also a large amount on the roll that parties will not have to pay a tax on. Shall give some startling examples in a future article.

Cal Miracle, Breathitt County Murderer Sentenced to Die Next Week—Killed Husband and Wife.

Frankfort, Ky., March 15.—Unless an act of executive clemency intervenes, the electric chair in the State prison at Jodyville will execute "the first white victim next week. The man who is awaiting execution is Cal Miracle, the Breathitt County murderer.

On August 26 last Miracle shot and killed Matthew Jones at his home near Pineville. The screams of the wife and children of the victim attracted Mrs. Dolcie Gibson, a neighbor, to the scene. On her way she met Miracle, who shot and killed her. The double murderer fled to the mountains and for several months all efforts to capture him were without avail. Several months later he was found in Birmingham, Ala., where he was arrested and returned to Pineville for trial.

Why Be Sick When All Can Be Well.

Chiropractic Science The Great Aid To Suffering Humanity

Chiropractic goes right straight to the cause of disease and removes it, and that's the only way to get well—REMOVE THE CAUSE OF THE DISEASE. The Philosophy of Chiropractic is to let nature make you well. If your spine is in perfect shape you can throw off all disease. If the cause of the disease is removed you will get well in just the same way you got sick. Chiropractic adjustments correct subluxations of the spine. Subluxations of the spine cause a pressure on the nerves leading from the brain to all parts of the body. As long as the pressure remains the life impulses which flow through the nerves are stopped and the parts of the body which are nourished by these nerves cannot perform their functions. If Chiropractic adjustments are given, the pressure removed, the life impulses flow readily then and not until then will you get well.

If you suffer today, do like hundreds of others have done, come to the office for an interview. Examination free. You will readily learn why hundreds have come from all over Rock county and have gotten well.

BOXING FANS LIKE
CARD AS ARRANGED

Billy Morehead and Kid De Munn
Should Make an Interesting Go
For Ten Rounds.

Match Maker Robert Hockett of the Janesville Athletic Club has signed up a good card for the coming boxing tournament of his association at the West Side rink, March 26th. Kid De Munn showed he is a game little boxer, using both head and feet in his work and with Billy Morehead as an opponent should make a most interesting ten round bout. Morehead is no stranger to the local fans and will have many friends in the audience that is sure to pack the West Side rink. Jack Regan of Milwaukee and Paul Harrison of Chicago who weigh in at 135 pounds, are sure to give a lively exhibition of fast work. Little fellows like the eight rounds they are scheduled for while Hon Bogardus, also a Chicago youth with application, will do his best to put it over Frankie Sulder, the little Sycamore youth, weighing in at 120 pounds. In the eight rounds allotted for their bout, Jack Dougherty of Madison will not as the referee and he has the reputation of being a live wire in the squared circle, who keeps the boys working to their limit.

LOCAL QUINTETS IN BIG GAMES TONIGHT

High School and Cardinals Play Important Games in Race for State Championships This Evening.

Two outside games have been billed for tonight, one between the Cardinals and Company E of Fond du Lac, and the other between the High School and Columbus at Madison for the Appleton representative. The latter game will take place in the gymnasium of the Madison high school this evening and will decide which of the two teams shall be chosen for this division of the state to go to Appleton and try for the state championship. Janesville has been successful in every game so far this year and have defeated all of their opponents by scores which left no doubt as to their superiority over all of the teams they have met. Columbus has also been very successful this season and by defeating Montello last week made themselves the only other competitor for the right to go to Appleton. Judging from the way the local fans have been running away from the eight teams which they have so far defeated so far this season and from the condition of the team as present it is not doubtful in the minds of the Janesville supporters what the outcome of the game will be. Despite the fact that tomorrow the star Janesville center, has been forced to drop out on account of illness and Wilkerson the sub center is also incapacitated for playing, the J. H. S. team intend to defend their laurels and go to the state tournament and make good there.

Fond du Lac's Company E team is the next victim of the Lakota Cardinals, the game being played at that city tonight. Janesville claims the championship of southern Wisconsin since defeating Monroe and Waterloo, while Company E has been victorious over everything in their section of the state. Since Janesville has defeated tonight another team will have to played here as a championship cannot be decided with one team on its home floor, unless the score is so exceedingly one-sided that there is no doubt as to the superiority of the winning team.

Both of the local teams have tough propositions on their hands for tonight and both of them will have to go into a fight to the finish, according to all reports, but the Janesville people who have been watching the two aggregations in their careers of victory, have faith in their ability to continue to make names for themselves in the state this year.

WITH THE BOXERS.

Eddie Hantry, the old-time featherweight, has been appointed matchmaker for the Fort Wayne, Ind., Athletic Club.

The National Sporting Club of New York has offered an $11,000 purse for a bout between Al Palmer and Carl Morris.

Marty Fockins, Eddie McGorty's manager, says that Ed will make 150 pounds by running around the block twice any morning.

Hughie McKeegan, champion lightweight of Australia, is coming to this country in June and will try to hook up with Al Wolszt in a championship battle.

BASEBALL NOTES.

The Buffalo Club has released Charles Stary to the Mobile Club of the Southern League.

Scott Tom O'Hara, who was with the St. Louis Browns last season, has signed with the New York Highlanders.

Pitcher Rubo Marquard, of the Giants, who was until recently a member of the Holdout Junta, has signed a three-year contract.

Doncen Phillips, the former Pirate, and Jack Warner, the old big league catcher, are spoken of as managers in the new Columbia league.

Manager Hugh Duffy, of the Milwaukee team, believes he has a real ball player in Philarty, who comes from the New England league.

The White Sox have two swell dancers in Buck Weaver and Ben Hansen. Buck is a rattling dancer, while Hansen does fancy Swedish steps.

Only twenty men now enrolled on teams in the Southern league were members of the organization in 1909, nine of these men who were recently released by Baltimore to the Troy Club of the New York State league, refused to report to Manager Ramsey.

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, doesn't think he will do much this season, outside of outkicking Ty Cobb as batsman, run-getter, base-stealer and outfielder.

"It Isn't What-You Make, It's What You Get," says Felix to Fin k.

Time and again have Janesville people attested to the wonderfully rapid results obtained with The United Doctors' treatment—the expert specialists who have their Janesville Institute in the Hayes Bldg., corner of Milwaukee and Main streets. Every testimonial the United Doctors receive is a source of pride to them for it shows their work in more than usually appreciated. It is small wonder when an ailing person who has had the impression a surgical operation is necessary finds that they can be cured without the knife and the fact is proved to them.

Miss Elma Spencer, a well known young lady who lives at 23 South bluff street, Janesville, is one of the latest to offer praise to the United Doctors, and her statement is as follows:

Janesville, Wis., March 2, 1912.
Dear Doctors: I have been suffering with a severe case of Goitre for the last two years which troubled me greatly. I was afraid to undergo an operation for this and having heard that The United Doctors could cure Goitre without an operation I decided to go to you.

It might interest you to know of my present condition since starting your treatment. I used to sleep a great deal and would suddenly choke and be unable to emit a sound. Now I have no trouble of that nature whatever. My Goitre is less than half the size it was and is going down steadily. I did not believe it was possible to reduce it in that manner and am more than pleased, not only at the relief from my Goitre, but at the great improvement in my general health all around.

Anyone wanting to know more about my case can call on me or write me and if they are ailing I will be more than glad to tell them how I feel.

You can use this testimonial for publication if you wish for it is due other sufferers to know where to go for relief.

Very Sincerely,

ELMA SPENCER.

Patrick's Celebration.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]
Evansville, March 15.—The "Coffee" which was given at the home of Mrs. J. P. Porter Friday afternoon was largely attended, there being sixty present. The event was of the nature of a celebration of St. Patrick's day. The rooms were very daintily decorated with green crepe paper. The waitresses wore green paper caps and green corsage bouquets. The center table was decorated with ferns, a thurney stone, and small green flags which in turn were decorated with shamrock in silk, each little flagstaff was thrust into an Irish potato.

An interesting sketch of the life of St. Patrick and a story of the thurney stone were read by Mrs. Gertrude Packer. Miss Wallace sang a solo which was encored, and Mr. Porter gave three Irish songs, "Good Morning to You," "Kathleen Mavourneen," and "Dear Little Shamrock," on his Victrola. Some Irish puns and also two selections that were recited by Miss Adelaide Evans. Much merriment was created by the unsuccessful efforts of several blindfolded ladies to tell the plot. Salad, wafers, coffee and cake were served, the color-scheme being carried out in the salad.

They may lack enterprise and push—very important requisites in making money. The story is told of a young man who commenced business as a clerk in a hardware store in his home town on the modest salary of six dollars a week. He possessed a good deal of mechanical genius, and at odd times displayed it in dressing up the windows.

One of his best efforts was a locomotive which took him some time to construct from goods in the store. His clever work was the talk of the town and attracted many customers.

A gentleman from a neighboring city came to him one day and offered him ten dollars a week to go home with him and operate in a larger field. He accepted, and within a year was drawing a good salary. And in less than five years was in business for himself, backed by an abundance of capital.

Just a common clerk in a hardware store, doing a boy's work for a boy's pay, but he was a business creator and a business getter, and long before middle life he had made a place for himself and money was looking for him, as it always is for this class of men.

This boy was no better envied than thousands of young men who are content to drift along in times-worn ruts, but he discovered early in the game that there was room near the top for men who could produce results, and so he started out to become a producer and won.

Have you ever noticed the difference between the American and German farmer? The former wants to own a good driving horse and carriage, and usually does. He wants a seven o'clock breakfast and an early supper. If he has any boys they are ready to leave home for a clerkship and a life in town, by the time they are old enough to earn a living, and his girls are ready to escape from the farm at the first opportunity. His land may be producing capacity crops, but the chances are against it, and in time he becomes disgusted, sells out and moves to town to spend the balance of his days.

Not so the German. He has no time for a horse and carriage, and daylight is the only time limit for hours of labor. The family all work, and the boys and girls stay by the farm and are satisfied. As a result the complexion of rural population is rapidly changing, and the German and his close rival, the Scandinavian, possess the land once occupied by the American farmer. They are officers of the soil, and satisfactory results follow. The same farmers with the same opportunities—simply a difference in men.

The notion is gaining in popularity that in some mysterious way, money and property should be divided so that every man would have an equal chance. This socialistic doctrine, made popular by agitation, is the cause of much of the unrest which now prevails. If it were possible to bring it about, it is estimated that every man, woman and child in the country would have $2,500. And this is what would happen. In less than twelve months all the money and property would be back in the old channels. Why? Because money that comes without effort goes just as easy, and the man who never saved a dollar is totally unfit for stewardship.

Wealth is being distributed today in this country, more generously than ever before. Not in the way of charity, for nobody but a mendicant would accept money without an equivalent, but in the way of opportunity. Capital is brain and brawn and moral character—three requisites which the average man possesses in greater or less degree. All of them are capable of development.

Money is an inanimate thing, as helpless as iron ore, and so great blocks of it lie idle most of the time. Look at any bank statement and note the certificate of deposits account. Idle money drawing a low rate of interest because the owners are too timid to invest it themselves. There are plenty of men with money who don't know how to use it, but you never saw a man without money who couldn't tell you all about how to invest it.

The nimble dollar, which keeps the wheels of commerce and industry in motion, is not this kind of money. It belongs to the venturesome spirits who believe in doing things, and it circulates so freely and in so many channels that any capitalist possessing brain and brawn and moral character may secure a share legitimately, and thus aid in the division of property.

Fifty-two per cent of all the people in this land are property-owners. That's more than half. These people are saying to the other forty-eight per cent, "move up and occupy advanced ground, and join the ranks of successful artisans."

If some man has fallen out by the way, slip into his place, pick up the discarded weapon and go to the front, where there's always room and a fighting chance.

ON A PURSUE THE MOMENT

DOWN TO THE GROCERY STORE.

Excitement's run-in will these days down to the grocery store. The patriots don't get no time to do a single chore. They can't pay no attention to the farmwork any more. Besides they've got to make a choice. 'Twixt Tat and Theodoro. The fate of this here nation rests upon what they may do. They're gosh! to see the thing to rights before they have got through. They're rumblin' down each rumor and they're follerin' up each clew. And not a day goes by but what they dig up something new.

Looks like the farms around these parts will raise a crop of weeds. Besides our men have got to tend to this here country's needs. They keep on floundering out new things and stricklin' brand new leads. And servin' of one's country is the grandest of all deeds.

The whimsy round these parts, all think it is a degenous bore. They've heard so much of politics, they don't want any more. But politics is plin' up and arky-marks galore. It makes a good excuse to loaf down to the grocery store.

CAUGHT ON THE FLY.

Uncle Andy Carnegie says any man can make money. Uncle Andy, by the way, never wrote poetry for the magazines.

Now that gum chewing is no longer allowed in the navy it is possible that in time the pink teas and briques which contacts will be eliminated. A debating club in Kansas has decided that a bald man can't be a hero. This is a terrible slip at Richmond, Kentucky.

It has been suggested that the colonial organize a Sapphire club, but the colonial will not, for he is always a gentleman.

It is some difficult to tell right now whether a statesman is a progressive standstiller or a standstill progressive.

It is said a Republican has been discovered in South Carolina. He is probably a tourist.

The railroads have ordered 60,000 new freight cars. This will be welcome news to the stranded theatrical companies that want to get back to Broadway.

So far as is known none of the presidential candidates at the present time were in a log cabin. The press agents are overlooking the bet.

RELATED SCANDALS.

(Historians are beginning to tell tales about some very popular idols. They have lifted the lids from the private lives of so many old statesmen and have attempted to shatter so many ideals of late that it is getting to be a national scandal.)

They tell us that John Hancock almost served a term in jail. And that he had to hustle round a lot to fix his bail. They say that our George Washington rode out nights in a hack and that he never hit that famous and cherry tree a whack. They say he fought the Indians and paid 'em off in rum. And down the gay and festive pike he used to ramble some. They say he dodged his taxes and that sometimes he would swear; in fact they've knocked him some-thing fierce and laid his secrets bare.

They've tried to pull the laurels from the brow of Paul Revere. They say a hobby was the only horse he ever was near. They've dug up family skeletons and held them to the light. And say that Lafayette faked out and was afraid to fight. They say Pat Henry didn't speak on "Liberty or Death." And that B. Franklin often had trouble on his breath. But let them tell their funny tales, we really must allow. These "eminent historians" have got to live somehow.

SCRIPTURE

GENESIS 1: 1-10

In the beginning God created the heaven and earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

And God said, let there be light; and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness.

And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day.

And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.

And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament: and it was so.

And God called the firmament Heaven. And the evening and the morning were the second day.

And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear; and it was so. And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas; and God saw that it was good.

PRESS COMMENT

Election Law Muddle. Evening Wisconsin: When the Mary Ann bill was before the legislature, the Evening Wisconsin never lost an opportunity to point out its demerits and the certainty that if enacted into law it would prove confusing to the voter. At its best, a Mary Ann ballot would be diabolically perplexing, even to voters of fair intelligence. At its worst it is sure to be destructive of the power of the electorate to exercise the constitutional function of choosing public servants, for by the use of the Mary Ann ballot results tend to be no more certainly responsive to the wish of the participants in an election than is the distribution of prizes to participants in a lottery. The hopeless muddle into which the attempt to use the Mary Ann ballot in the approaching election has thrown the selection of aldermen-at-large provokes wide exasperation among voters. It seems to be partly due to blundering in the office of the city clerk. But the initial blunder was made by the legislature when it passed the Mary Ann bill. The Mary Ann law would be a good one to repeal.

More Obscurity. Wausau Record-Herald: What is the time fixed by law for the filing of nomination papers in this city? The opinion of the city attorney, rendered Monday on that question, was probably correct, but the point is one upon which there is enough difference of opinion to cause a lawsuit.

The same obscurity prevails with regard to a large number of other subjects. The corrupt practice law contains enough problems to keep the traditional Philadelphia lawyer in hot water for the rest of his life. The new income tax law is so complicated that no business man dares to make out his report under it without consulting his attorney. Legislatures in this state have had such a run for law making that they have apparently lost sight of the necessity of making the laws plain enough for the people to understand. The statutes are inextricably "scrambled." They are obscure, ambiguous, contradictory, and so sit up into rules and exceptions and qualifications and special acts and special qualifications relating to special cases—so saved off and patched up, and stuck on—that it gives one a headache to look up the simplest proposition.

Oshkosh's Viewpoint. Oshkosh Northwestern: It would be grievous mistake to select even one poor official to serve under the commission plan soon to be placed in operation in this city. Every one of the three officials to be chosen should be of high standing and ability for the powers and responsibilities of such will be of equal importance with that of the others.

Rebels Attack Of Death. "Five years ago two doctors told me I had only two years to live." This startling statement was made by William Green, Maconite, Colo.

"They told me I would die with consumption. It was up to me then to try the best lung medicine and I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery. It was well I did, for today I am working and believe I owe my life to this great throat and lung cure that has cheated the grave of another victim." It's folly to suffer with coughs, colds or other throat and lung troubles now. Take the cure that's safest. Price 60 cents and $1.00. Trial bottle free at People's Drug Co.

Over 2300 Rock County subscribers supply the necessary basis for a valuable telephone system; the subscribers make it valuable, without them you have a "play phone" system.

When the Rock County System entered the field the residence rate put into effect was $1 per month. and a bigger, better Janesville. Good government and a clean, liberal town is my platform.

NEW YORK'S PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE FRIEND OF SIR THOMAS FELINE

"That the Thomas Cat may take its place alongside the lion" says as a presidential candidate's mascot and emblem of hope is the possibility that has arisen here this week. Mayor Chauncey of New York, whose presidential boom has reached the dignity of having an official headquarters, instead of discussing the referendum or the recall of judges, has rushed into print with a spirited defense of the gentleman cat against those who would restrain his freedom to give nightly concerts on metropolitan back fences. In a letter to a complaining citizen the mayor advises him to go to sleep and let the cats howl, although, as his correspondent plaintively points out, this

MUNICIPAL EXPERIENCE

Gives Him Valuable Lead. His Ideas Regarding Duties Are Sound.

JAMES A. FATHERS

James A. Fathers has pronounced views on municipal government under the commission plan and his close contact with affairs gives him an advantage which is of great value to the city. He is able to start with an experience where any other candidate will enter with the handicap of inexperience.

WOULD CONSERVE CITY FINANCES.

I am a staunch advocate and firm believer in the results to be obtained through Commission Form of Government for cities.

Commission Form of Government, when properly conducted, is absolutely free from politics or "political pull," thereby doing away with many petty expenditures that waste the people's money.

The very foundation of the law and the reason of its enactment was, and it absolutely means, that there shall be conducted a plain BUSINESS MANAGEMENT of public affairs, along the same lines and methods that are used by successful mercantile and manufacturing institutions; thereby reducing the burden of taxation to a minimum.

In the reconstruction of our municipal government the duties will be so varied and perplexing that it necessarily requires experience in city affairs and sound judgment on the part of those who undertake to do it, further, it will require the energy, industry, effort and the very best thought to attain the results so earnestly desired by the people.

Next to the public health and safety, the most important thing in government is financing—to save the people's money—to relieve the burden of taxation—to equalize it with justice to all, so that each will pay their just and proportionate share of the cost of government.

In the expenditure of public money there are many places where economy can and should be practiced and which will not in the least affect the efficiency of the service rendered, look after the "little things" and therefore it makes it much easier to get the "big things."

I realize that it requires constant care and "eternal vigilance" to prevent unworthy measures or schemes from creeping into legislation, things that are a detriment to the welfare of the people, thus making it absolutely necessary to be constantly on the alert to safeguard the people's interests.

Possessing no funds or families to foist upon a people having no axe to grind, being free from entanglement of "political pull"—"free footed" on any and all propositions that would tend to warp good judgment.

A thorough student of our Municipal Government, I feel warranted in saying that I am perfectly familiar with all the details of the City Government, through my long experience as City Treasurer, covering a period of years since 1894.

In a word, I stand upon that high and broad plane of citizenship that calls for an honest, economical and progressive home government, that which entails for a better, more prosperous, successful and harmonious Janesville.

With grateful acknowledgement, and thanking the citizens of Janesville for past favors and soliciting your support at the polls, I am,

Yours truly, JAMES A. FATHERS.

Candidate for Mayor.

THE ROCK COUNTY HISTORY HAS THIS TO SAY OF MR. FATHERS IN PART.

James A. Fathers was born in Chicago on May 5th, 1859, and was but an infant when his parents removed to Janesville. He attended the public schools until he was fourteen years old, when he entered the woolen mills of P. A. Wheeler & Sons, learning the trade of a carder.

Not liking the present, he abandoned it, and subsequently acquired the business making trade in the establishment of C. H. Payne.

After working four years as a journeyman, he bought out Mr. Payne and successfully conducted the business until 1889, when ill health compelled his retirement from active labor.

For three years he conducted a meat market, but abandoned this enterprise upon his election to the city treasurer in 1894. This office he has held continuously up to the present time by successive reelection. To a discharge of his official duties, he brought a large fund of common sense, a considerable knowledge of public affairs and unswerving integrity, which qualities joined with gentleness of disposition and urbanity of manner, admirably qualified him for a post of grave responsibility whose occupant is daily called upon to do business with "all sorts and conditions of men."

The year 1891, however, did not mark Mr. Father's debut in the arena of public life. At the age of twenty-two he was chosen on the Republican ticket, to represent the Third ward upon the board of aldermen. He occupied a seat in that body for four years, and for three years served as president of the council.

He is universally popular, and is regarded as one of Janesville's most influential citizens.

Sin Against Light.

It is no disgrace to be mistaken; it is a crime to be a hypocrite. That is the sin against light—the worst of all.—John Oliver Hobbs.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for city commissioner at the coming primary election.

I sincerely believe in the commission form of government. I have been a free voter for forty years, regardless of any political party, ring or clique and pay taxes on real estate in three wards.

For thirty-five years I have studied plans and specifications and made estimates of the cost of all kinds of materials used in public and private buildings in this and other cities; of losses by fire, water and natural decay; and the cost of material and labor to replace them; and have practical knowledge by actual test of the strength and duration of material under various conditions. In view of the thousands of dollars invested in public buildings and other property I believe that hundreds of dollars can be saved the city by such knowledge in the administration of its affairs.

Along this line, for some years I did nearly all of the city's work. I believe in the strict enforcement of the law in all cases.

Therefore, I solicit the votes of all law abiding citizens and if elected will do all in my power to merit your support and bring about a clean, orderly and economical administration.

A few facts about the life and business career of John W. Peters, whose announcement as candidate for mayor on a strong platform has excited much interest, will be read with much more than the usual amount of attention and should be public property.

Mr. Peters has lived in Janesville practically all of his life. As a young man he followed his natural inclination and took up masonry and general building contract work, his first contract being for the Janesville Cotton Company in the erection of a wheel pit which still stands on the old race way at the rear of the building used by the Janesville Paper Box Company.

He was for fifteen years connected with the engineering department of

The Hayes Brothers company, organized in Mr. Peters a man of unusual ability and they therefore became associated with him in the erection of the power house, locks and dams on the Chicago drainage canal work at Lockport. This single piece of work amounted to $1,500,000.

Within the last three and one-half years the mammoth government irrigation dam at Belle Fourche, South Dakota, a five million dollar project, on which a number of contracting failures had been made, was undertaken by the Hayes Brothers company and Mr. Peters and the completion of the work was successfully accomplished last June, over two million dollars being involved in this job.

The Hayes Brothers company and Mr. Peters found the work in a bankrupt condition at the time they took hold of the proposition, but put it on a paying basis in thirty days. The company found a big strike on hand and every other obstruction to the smooth handling of the work. However, the dam was finished in the specified time and is one of the engineering marvels of the world. In fact, it is the largest earthen dam in the world.

Mr. Peters has had the broadest kind of training and experience in the handling of men and in carrying on big work. This fits him splendidly for the work of looking after the city's interests, in a practical way.

The matter of building of bridges and the inspection thereof, the building and repair of streets, the knowledge of proper material and as to when these materials are properly placed, all of these items and many others, all of much importance to the taxpayer and property owner, and in Mr. Peters is found a man of executive ability, an organizer of unusual experience and a successful business man.

My dealings in this city for the last ten years speak best of my honesty and ability.

I did not make any promises to any one, and I am soliciting the support of the voters, and if elected will do the best of my judgment and ability.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Paid advertisement; amount paid, $1.25 each insertion.

TO THE VOTERS:—I announce myself as a candidate for the office of Councilman, and seek the nomination for that office at the primary election to be held in this city March 19th, 1912.

My rule of life has been and will be to do unto others as I wish others to do unto me.

Any official making the advantage of position to punish an enemy is not to be trusted as a friend, and will be a menace to our city interests.

I believe in just laws impartially administered. I believe that every business interest of every kind and character, that has a lawful right to exist under the law has an equal right to the protection of the law.

I believe the rule of the late John A. Dix is sound. How to the law and let the chips fall where they will.

I believe that no partial interest or political influence should in any way be recognized by our city officials, or in any way influence their action. The law is the line to guide their action. If they bow to the line we will have a just administration. I am not and for the last 30 years have been a member of The Rock County Bar association, and also of the state bar association. I have been for many years a student of the law governing the human family, and feel that I have a good general knowledge of its principles, and if elected commissioner, I will devote my entire time to the duties of the office, spurred on by the hope that I may be credited at the end of my term with having earned my salary.

JOHN W. PETERS.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I learned the street building trade as a young man in my native country, Germany, and as all know when any trade is learned in that country, your training is most thorough, and you are qualified to follow that occupation.

I believe in a "Square Deal" to all mankind and that this doctrine should be applied to street building and repairing and our citizens given full value for their money for this class of work.

I do not believe that it is necessary to go to the extra expense of digging out and draining away from our streets from 6 to 12 inches of native soil as in most cases this soil is more valuable than the material used in its place.

I do not believe that a macadamized street should be dug up and the material which the abutting property owner has paid for, hauled in to some other place.

In conclusion I will say that I believe in the doctrine of a "Square Deal" first last and all the time, in all things to all mankind. It has been remarked that I am too old for the office but if elected will show that this is not the case.

Minneapolis, Minn., March 16.—What is believed to be the most brilliant electrical display ever held on the continent was inaugurated today, when Thomas A. Edison showed the connecting link in his laboratory at Orange, N. J. This linked an electric lamp in the Minneapolis Armory, which stored all the machinery in motion, and the third annual Northwest Electrical Exposition, as is its title, was officially dedicated and started. Hundreds of attractive exhibits, representing all of the latest electrical devices and improvements, occupy the fully decorated booths. These booths have been grouped into seven sections over which are blazoned in light the names of the seven greatest living electrical engineers—Edison, Bell, Thompson, Brush, Tesla, Steinmetz and Westinghouse.

FORECAST OF NEWS FOR COMING WEEK

Some Political Gatherings of Importance Will Be Held According to Announcements.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]
The principal events on the democratic calendar will be the state conventions in Maine and Indiana. The former will meet in Augusta to name delegates to attend the national convention. The Indiana convention, to be held in Indianapolis, will be broader in scope, as it will nominate a state ticket in addition to naming presidential electors and delegates to the Baltimore convention. Governor Marshall is expected to receive the endorsement of the Indiana convention for the presidential nomination.

Woodrow Wilson appears to be favored in Maine, although an undivided delegation is a probability. President Taft is to leave Washington Sunday night for New England. He will make several speeches in Boston and take part in the Evacuation Day celebration in that city Monday and will visit Nashua and Concord, N. H., the next day. Although no announcement has been made of subjects for speeches the President will make on his trip, it is regarded as practically certain that he will not fail to include in his addresses some of the topics touched by Col. Roosevelt in his Columbus speech.

Word comes from Lincoln that the annual Irish birthday banquet to be held in that city Tuesday will be the occasion of a nation-wide progressive democratic conference. Senator Gore of Oklahoma, George Fred Williams of Massachusetts, Frederick Townsend Martin of New York and a number of prominent party men have accepted invitations to attend the gathering.

SPRING AND SUMMER 1912

FASHION EDITION

PARIS
and
AMERICAN FASHIONS

Modish Offerings for Spring in SUITS and GOWNS

Copyright, 1912, by J. J. Robinson.

WHETHER the present rational styles, with their dull, delightful colorings, their graceful, sweeping lines and their general simplicity of design, are due to a widespread improvement of feminine taste that rejects flat-footed, the ugly and bizarre, or whether they are merely the chance evolution of fashions past and gone, is a problem not simple to solve. Certain it is that the makers of modes, in a great to-do at the turn of the century, which woman has clung, for several seasons past, to certain well-defined tenets of style, have made violent efforts to interest her in hoops and bustle skirts and other startling innovations. But quite to no avail—she has turned her sweet back on them, and turned down firmly her pretty, polished thumbs. However it be, not in many years have the styles been so practical and so reasonable and withal so universally becoming and beautiful. The trig, snug, simple tailored suit for street wear—the soft, clinging, low-toned afternoon gown—the flimsy evening toilettes with their Oriental motifs.—It is small wonder women should be loath to give these up.

There have been no really radical changes in the general contour of either suits or gowns. They are cut on close, figure-defining lines, although the skirts are not extreme, and in the dressier gowns are given a certain appearance of fullness by the falling of the overskirt about the waist, the bottom, however, being cut very scant.

The side fastening, and the side trimming predominate, the suit-coats rarely having more than two or three large buttons to fasten them. Gun metal, horn and bone buttons are used in great deal. An effective touch is often added to a suit by binding the buttonholes with the material with which the suit is trimmed.

Rolling revers and rounded sailor-collar effects have been developed in various new forms, and, quite a bit longer than those seen in the winter, will be a marked feature of the spring suits. In length the suit coats vary from twenty-four to twenty-eight inches, although in the semi-tailored and more elaborate silk suits twenty inches is considered good length.

Many of the models are of the smart belted designs, with the waist line indicated a little above the normal. Of this style was a most attractive blue serge suit, in the cutaway effect, which is much favored this season. The back of the coat was drawn into a belt, just above the waist line, and all fullness and clumsiness was eliminated by the adroit cutting of the back and side seams. All the stitching on the suit was done in plum-color, and into the large revers, which rolled into a side fastening of two big buttons was a triangular inset of plum-color and black satin.

The simple street suit invariably has the long sleeve, but the silk models or the elaborate three-piece suits have often the seven-eighths sleeve. These latter have a tendency toward flowing lines and draped effects.

The skirts are still quite narrow, most of them having either inserted panels, used to obtain the slashed effects so well in favor, or else they have overlapping panels at front and back, which are fastened down only as far as the hips. The cross-over style is well liked when the coat has the side fastening, and with button trimming and the slightly raised waist line these are very neat.

The wide-wale serge are largely employed for the simple street suit, although mohair, worsteds and spring weight ratines are very modish. It is taffeta silk, however, that is flashing its changeable gleams from the pinnacle of popularity. It will be used largely, not only for gowns and trimmings, but for the suits for summer wear.

When serge is among the fashionable fabrics one may depend upon various shades of blue being to the fore. Other spring colors you may expect to see in the Easter promenade are lovely soft tans and light browns, stone and taupe greys, plums, hordenaux, whites and greens. It is tan, perhaps, and shades of champagne that will predominate.

The vogue for contrasting materials has been carried over to the spring offerings. One pretty model of tan taffeta had the large revers made of a striped brown and tan satin. The cuffs were of the same, and the skirt, which was in the tunic effect, had the under portion of the striped material. Lace will be used on many of the cloth suits, in the way of collars and cuffs, and will be used more lavishly on the silk models.

Separate coats retain most of the features of the winter styles—the wide, one-side lap, the straight, narrow cut, the big revers. The sleeves are somewhat roomier, and the large armhole is especially to be sought by the woman who is given to schu effects in her gowns. Double faced materials are favored, and on many of the coats are silk or satin collars and cuffs in contrasting color. For a little later wear linen or plique collars and cuffs will be seen with the long coats. Although the utility coats are all full length, one may find an occasional coat intended for dressy wear that is three-quarters or seven-eighths length. These are usually in the cutaway effects and developed in silk or satin.

The taffeta gown is without doubt the leading feature of the Spring season. After the gleaming satins and velvets and the all-over embroidery come blue well with any of the favored lines. Embroidered flouncing will be in great demand, owing to the vogue of the mistiness of past seasons. It comes back to us with a quality domino charm that is emphasized by the present styles in which it is made up. Flat, narrow ruffles are seen again about the bottom of some of these gowns. A little afternoon frock of blue and green changeable taffeta was happily trimmed as to the skirt, with three rows of bands of plaited silk. The bottom of these bands was finished with a cord of the silk, and the top with a tiny upstanding frill. The waist had a schu of the silk trimmed with several rows of cording, which was brought into a huge silver buckle just above the waist line. About the bottom of the slightly raised belt was another tiny frill that gave the effect of an outside flange, to the waist that is so well liked just now. Models which are really but a variation of the Russian blouse carry this idea to its extreme, the extension below the belt sometimes taking on the form of a short tunic.

Plaid silk was used for the waist and the upper half of the skirt of a simple little frock in greens and blues. The plaid was cut in somewhat of an apron shape on the skirt, reminding one of the Mogen Age effects. Still another gown of blue satin had the upper part of the waist of blue and white striped satin, with a short, tight tunic, which resembled more a peplum, reaching only to the hips.

A schu of soft white tulle, double frilled, lightened up a black taffeta gown which was trimmed to the knee with scalloped silk ruffles. Tiny silk taffeta bows were set in a line down the middle of the front, and trimmed the sleeves. Short rippling basques finished the fitted corsage.

The lingerie gowns are more attractive than ever this year. It seems many of them are solid lace and embroidery, and so fragile and flimsy in appearance that one can not possibly associate them with the wash-tub. Venise laces are used for these, to a great extent, and machine-made flots are popular, while the eyelet embroidery of lingerie gowns made with two or three flounces to form the skirt. These flounces are really applied one to the other so that the close lines are maintained. Surplice or schu waists are most often seen with skirts of this description.

Several new features were noted on the imported lingerie gowns in an exclusive little shop this spring. All of them had a touch of color, usually at the belt. One of them had a cerise velvet sash, with an old old gold prominent fastening it under the arm, a bit toward the back; another had not only a plum-color velvet sash, but the panels of lace that hung at the front and back of the skirt were weighted with three large velvet buttons, on either side. A striking idea on one stunning model was the two-inch strip of black satin that extended from under the arm to the bottom of the hem and was laced across, for the entire length, with white cord.

Very frilly and chic was the effect of plaited white net ruffles which had a narrow black border, about the bottom of an elaborate lace frock. If velvet sash, with an old old gold prominent fastening it under the arm, a bit toward the back; another had not only a plum-color velvet sash, but the panels of lace that hung at the front and back of the skirt were weighted with three large velvet buttons, on either side. A striking idea on one stunning model was the two-inch strip of black satin that extended from under the arm to the bottom of the hem and was laced across, for the entire length, with white cord.

of the same completed the sleeves and gave a most individual touch to the whole garment.

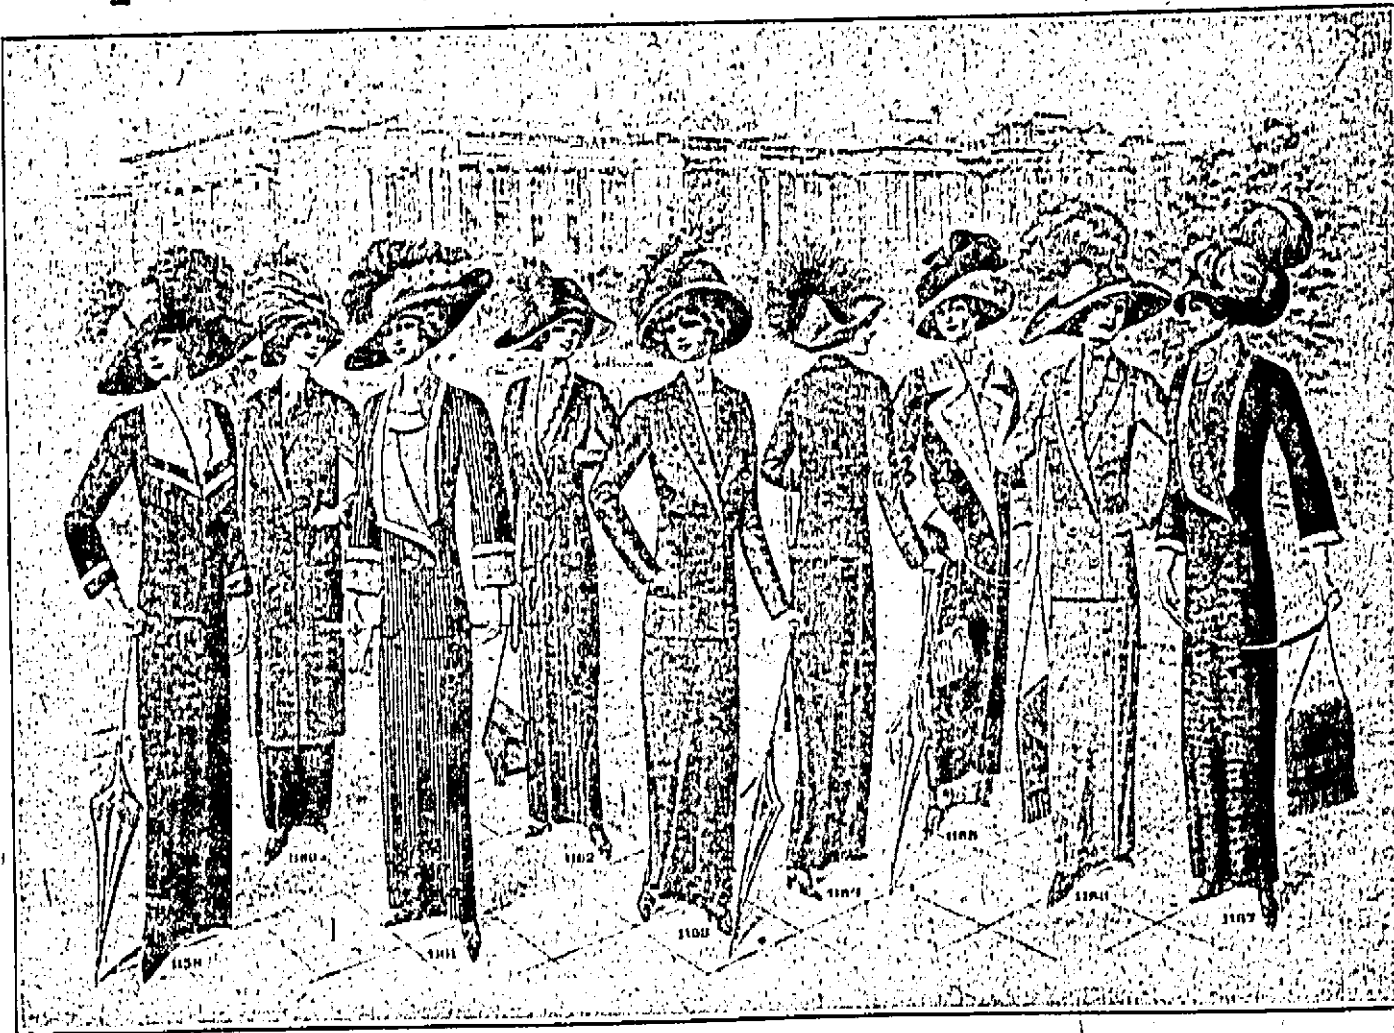

A pretty touch was given to a simple little gown of embroidery and lace by the girde of fine dark blue beads that had been twisted into a cord, and was tied loosely about the waist.

are in greatest demand for the tailored effects, while cotton velvets, both striped and with the printed borders, are being made up into dainty little afternoon frocks. The Russian blouse bids fair to rival the popular sailor collar styles in the little morning dresses. Crashes, ruche linens and welt plaques

The sole trimming of some of these frocks consists of the large pearl buttons that fasten the overlapping panels of the skirt, and the smart four-hand tie. A neat model of white Bedford cord was thus trimmed. The sailor collar and wide turn-back cuffs were finished by embroidered scalloped

The CHIC CHAPEAUX for EARLY SPRING

By Rene Mansfield

Copyright, 1912, by J. J. Robinson.

The day seems to have passed pretty well, when, if we were short and dumpy, or if we were long and lean we were obliged to search far and wide for suitable headgear, because all the hats were flat and squatty or else all the hats were steep and lowering. Though our gowns and suits must bear a modish family resemblance still, the latitude permitted to us in millinery this season is comforting and shoe-saving.

There are just two predominant characteristics of the spring hat—a crown also large enough to allow the hat to rest well down on the head, and the upward tilt of the brimmed shapes, which may have dashing dents to the side or back, or show the brim only gently rolled at the edge. For wear with the spring suit or even with the dressier costume, the small or the medium sized hat will undoubtedly be preferred, although later on the lingerie gowns will bring out the picturesque large hats which are always in good taste for dressy occasions.

The woman who is loath to give up the snug little bonnet shapes she found so becoming during the winter, will be delighted with the spring models which retain the close lines, but are developed in suitable materials. A distinct novelty is the small straw or taffeta hat made up quite without any wiring. The advantages of a hat of this sort, when travelling, are obvious. One pretty model had the crown and upper rim made from dark blue, finely woven hemp, while the under part of the brim was of more, coarsely woven hemp. The brim was turned up squarely across the front, and the only trimming was several red velvet roses which had been arranged on a wire to form a sort of algretto that tilted backward from the front of the crown. Flowers are used in this manner to a great extent, by the way, to simulate algrettes, and quills, thus giving height to the trimming. While the larger flowers appear to be more popular, the small flowers are often combined with them in most effective ways. A fairly large, black chip hat had as its sole trimming a wide quill-like ornament made of dull pink roses edged with lilac-of-the-valley. This curved over the crown from front to back with a graceful sweep.

Among the small hats the Oriental turban, made up from the soft taffeta that promises to be the vogue in millinery as well as in costume, will be worn for early spring. Wings and quills and the perky little "stick-up" feather ornaments will continue in use. For a little later wear turbans of maline with little wired upstanding sprays of flowers will be good. A delectable affair of pale pink maline had a sort of cockade at one side of pink rosebuds and violets.

The Tam O'Shanter crown hat will take on a new lease of life and in taffeta or any of the fine straws may be expected to perch itself rakishly on many a pretty head. Classically known as the Rembrandt, this style of hat is particularly adapted to the use of the taffeta silks, in plain and changeable effects. A model that promises to be very popular has the rolling brim of changeable taffeta, as well as the full draped crown which falls over it. The upstanding Nummulian feathers of the same shade as the silk give good style to it. Very attractive in this Rembrandt type when carried out in straw, with the entire top of the big, flat crown made of small flowers.

The medium sized hats, with their rolling or turned-up brims and, for the most part, flat, wide crowns, may be simply trimmed with wings or quills or draped smartly with the new silks or ribbons. The stiff little tailored bows seen on so many of the winter fashions have been elaborated into various odd rosettes and cockades formed of contrasting colors in satin or taffeta ribbons, with sometimes a touch of velvet ribbon introduced. A modish blue straw which was faced with blue velvet had for its trimming an ornament of narrow plaited ribbon, in ecru, jet, blue and black, which was shaped somewhat like the feathered piece that were so well liked, and placed on the crown of the hat in the form of the feather would be used.

Although the low, flat crowns have the preference, not a few extremely good style models have the high, bee-hive crown, combined with an upturning brim. Many of these are trimmed with flat bows, of the pin-wheel variety, which are placed quite high on the crown. To wear with her new spring suit of tan, a petite brunette selected one of these high-crown models the other day, which was faced with plum-colored velvet, and had two bows on either side of the crown, one of a peculiar shade of corlino velvet, the other of plum-color taffeta. You may be sure the effect, upon her, was striking.

This combination of plum color, or purple with shades of red, is greatly favored this spring. A toque of fur-gundy red straw and velvet, for instance, was trimmed with a large spray of dark purple violets, to one side, in the center of which nestle three red velvet roses. Black and white will hold its own, and although the darker shades of blue and purple and red will prevail, a few dashing models are shown in scarlet and emerald green. A three-cornered shape—the tricorne—is especially modish just now—of white tulle brand was faced with emerald green taffeta and trimmed with taffeta wired to simulate mercury wings, with a touch of black velvet at the base of each.

The more elaborate headgear is largely of the broad-brimmed, picturesque variety. The lace hat promises to be a prominent feature of midsummer millinery. Chantilly and maline laces lend themselves well to the all-lace hat, and for evening wear the gold or silver Chantilly is attractive with plume or algretto trimming. One of the prettiest of these becoming hats was made from the real Princess lace, and its sole trimming consisted of a spray of exquisite water lilies laid across the crown.

The leghorn hat, flower trimmed, is always a good choice for the youthful face. Many of these are being completely veiled with net or maline, which gives them an indescribably soft, filmy appearance. Green dotted net was used to veil one of the large shapes, and a sheath of green velvet and black velvet dahlias formed the trimming.

These bows of maline trim many of the dressier hats, some of them even having the entire crown of altered maline. Imagine how pretty, a big maline. Imagine how pretty, a big maline. Imagine how pretty, a big maline.

deep plum color velvet, and a crown of abraded maline of the same shade, with a bunch of pink rosebuds and blue bells crushed down at one side of the crown.

There is noticeably quite a tendency to fashion flowers for hat trimming from various fabrics suitable for that purpose. We had, in the winter, the quaint little wrenches and bunches of ribbon roses, with their leaves. One sees these frequently now, but more often the larger flowers made from chiffon or silk. Doubly enough for the trousseau of a bride was one hat trimmed with dahlias cleverly contrived in white chiffon, with the leaves made of wired satin, veiled with the chiffon. The hat itself was a leghorn over which the white chiffon had been shirred, and the whole effect charmingly youthful and simple.

Here's News of Spring Hats

It is better far to see them—for the hats we have on display in our advance showing are the styles themselves.

But to give you as vivid an idea of the new Millinery as we can in a word or two: Shapes may be large or small. The latter used more for Hats to wear with tailored suits—the former almost invariably with dressy suits and gowns—but there is great variety.

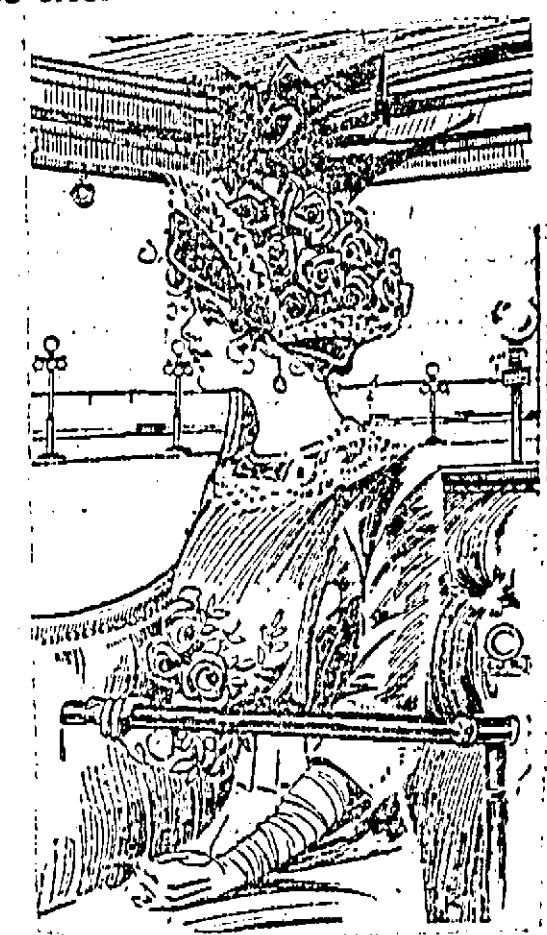

Picture yourself in a black Milan Hat, exactly the size and shape of a man's Derby, trimmed with just an upstanding cut-off white wing.

Street models range from that to immense round crown hats with sweeping brims—the left hand brim perhaps turned sharply up.

The materials are Milan straws and homps—almost exclusively—black, white or burnt. The trimmings which are almost always placed at front, whether flowers or feathers or little ornaments, in most cases stand straight up in the air.

Though there is wide latitude, the 1912 Hats have an air all their own and to catch its spirit there is nothing like seeing them. Our windows offer splendid opportunity tomorrow.

Where the contour of the lot permits, a home of this style, is very attractive, and the harmonizing of the retaining wall, foundations and porch is artistically handled and the architecture of the house proper conforms nicely to the surroundings. The combination of stucco and frame with stone foundations, porch and retaining wall make an appearance of solidity which is pleasing and attractive. To make this property appear to best advantage the house should set back from the retaining wall at least 12 to 15 feet and the lawn should have only sufficient pitch to drain readily.

Copyright, 1911, by L. J. Robinson.
THE shoemaker, with his offerings for the spring and summer months, has surely provided plenty of work for the feminine hands to do.
 What with repairing the havoc wrought to hosiery by the demure but destructive pump which has abated not a jot in popularity—and maintaining in a state of immaculate purity her white canvas and buckskin boots, it looks like a busy season for the woman who keeps up with the fashions.
 But to give the shoemaker his due,
 never has he turned out such fascinating footwear as the shops will show this season. From the trim street boot to the dainty evening slipper the models show elegance of contour and style. For early spring wear the buttoned boot will be favored with the tailored suit and even with the dressy costume. These continue to be made with the medium short vamp, of the dull leathers or the patent kid with cloth or kid tops. Many of the street shoes show the high stub toe, although this feature is not carried to the extreme, and the straight tip and the Cuban heel prevail.

 Tan and brown leathers will be in greater demand than ever on account of the vogue for various shades of tan in suits and gowns. Among the higher grade shoes will be found those having the garter top, whose neat quality has endeared them to the smartly dressed woman. These are very attractive when the garter tops match the color of the frock with which they are worn. The garter idea has also been adapted to the low shoe, and those who care for button effects in the low shoe will find a pretty style which has the three buttons cleverly placed at the side.

 But it is the white shoe that is in the spot light, so to speak. In canvas or in buckskin they are being shown in a great variety of styles.
 There is the high boot of sixteen button length, in either canvas or buckskin; there is the comfortable oxford, of five eyelets, the perennial pump and the pretty Colonial slipper with its leather or metal buckle. There is a marked revival of the Colonial effects for both evening and street wear.
 And now a word about the evening and dancing slipper. Metal and beaded styles have the preference, although the light kids and satins, usually with a beaded toe design, will no doubt be worn later on with the lugerie gown. A practical choice is the black satin slipper, or the bronze, either of which look well with any color of gown.

HOSIERY, HELPS.
 Colonial styles in footwear are responsible for the wearing of white or light colored hose with slippers, and sometimes with the high boots.
 Embroidered effects are gaining steadily in favor.
 Champagne and tan shades will be seen, worn not only with toilettes of the same, but with black low shoes and gowns of contrasting color.
 Black lace stockings are pretty, with the plainer black satin slippers.
 Flesh color hose are a daring novelty that will continue to be worn by the woman who likes startling effects.

Suitable Styles for the Younger Generation

Copyright, 1912, by L. J. Robinson.
SUITS of mother's gown to shoe-top length, simplify the trimming just a bit, given up the tons a little with a dash of youthful color, and presto! you have the fashionable frock for the young girl. Both in suits and gowns the modes for the misses follow very closely those of her elders, and most becoming are this season's straight, simple lines, dashing never effects and quaint detail con-ceits, to the slight, girlish figures.

A pretty finish for the jaunty little cutaway coats, which is seen to a great extent in the adult suits, also, is the scalloped edge. The entire bottom of the coat, and the fronts to the lowest button, are cut in shallow scallops about three inches across, which are bound with a narrow soutache braid.
 In white serge, which had a hair line stripe of black, the effect was especially good.

The cunning garments for the wee kiddies this season show a wide variety of styles. There are sailor suits and Russian blouse suits for the tiny men, and kiddie styles and quaint surplices designs for small sister. The two-piece effects will be much worn this summer. These consist of a plaited skirt joined to an underbody, and an overblouse made usually in kimono style. These may be worn with or without a belt, but they are particularly pretty when finished with one of the wide patent leather belts, which are seen on so many of the little frocks.
 For the play dresses the heavy materials are favored—linen, rep, pique, and washable corduroy. Many of these are quite plain except for the scalloped edges, which are machine embroyered and which form a neat finish for neck, sleeve and skirt.

Plaids, in delicate colors, in the chambray or gingham, are often made very simply so that with them may be worn sailor collars and cuffs of sheer embroidery, lace edged. A pale pink and green plaid with a deep, cross-over collar and wide cuffs of sheer hand-embroidered batiste, had a quaint note introduced in the inch-wide knifepleating of the plaid gingham, which was carried around the lower edge of the belt.
 Some of the new coats show a clever adaptation of the cutaway style so modish in women's garments. Large collars and revers continue in favor as does likewise the side closing. And nothing less than adorable is the little girl's spring bonnet with the rose or ribbon on it. Bonnet shapes, with stiff little ornaments of feathers or ribbon, or faced with soft chiffons and trimmed with prim little posies, are the most alluring styles for the very small child.
 For the older girl are the small straw hats, flower trimmed, the serviceable pique hats, the close little bonnet hats, and the dainty lingerie hats, with a rose or two nestled here and there in the flunkeys.

What the Shops Are Showing in Skirts and Blouses

Copyright, 1912, by I. J. Robinson.

A WOMAN who is noted for her especially well-groomed appearance on all occasions, the other day divulged one of the reasons that undoubtedly contributes not a little to her trim features.

"I always," said she, "try to have two skirts for wear with my tailor suit. You know how much more quickly the skirt begins to show signs of wear than the coat. Well, if I have my suit made, I get the tailor to make me an extra skirt, as plain as possible; if I buy a suit ready made I match the material as nearly as possible, and have an odd skirt made up, or even sometimes make it myself. Then when I come into the house I slip off the regular suit skirt, slip into my odd skirt and thus keep my suit reasonably fresh looking without the constant pressing which is usually necessary."

A good suggestion this for the woman who intends to get an odd skirt—have it match, as nearly as you can, your street suit, and the waists which will go with one will do quite as well with the other also.

The skirts, while straight and narrow, are moderate and graceful in cut. Probably slashed effects over inserted panels are more strongly featured than other styles. Skirts which simulate the tunic mode, especially those with the side closing, are much seen. Models combining the slightly raised waist line with front and back panel effects are good. One very simple two-piece skirt showed the back with lapped over with the front, at the left side, and fastened with three bone buttons at waist and hem.

Buttons are used very freely for trimming, often in a solid line from the waist line to the bottom of the skirt. One trig white serge skirt had the overlapping front caught down for its entire length with large pearl buttons.

Never has the evening blouse, nor those designed for wear with the street suit, offered such a golden opportunity to the home dressmaker for the utilization of odd bits of lace, chiffon, velvet or silk. There are the sleeveless overblouses of chiffon, which just cover the seam of the armhole of the lining, and have their own armholes cut out very deep, suggesting thus the present sleeve tendency. This deep armhole will be a strong feature on many of the spring and summer waists.

Then there are the one-sleeved effects which permit the use of strips of pointed effects of lace. A plum color chiffon bodice, designed to wear with a suit of the same shade, was in surprise style, with a band of beautiful Venise lace extending across one shoulder. Odd little pieces of plum color velvet were placed just at the base of the high standing collar of net.

The fingerless blouses for the season show not the slightest introduction of color. They are made up largely from batistes, net, crepes, linen, and French velvet, and are most profusely trimmed with lace, Venise flit, elany and Irish lace, and their imitations have the preference, which are charmingly combined with motifs of embroidery.

The sleeves of these blouses show no fullness, most of them being set into the waist, and of three-quarter length. Not a few models have dainty ruffles of either the material or of lace just at the elbow, which are indelibly pretty above a pretty arm.

COIFFURE MODES

Jane Drayton.

Copyright, 1912, by I. J. Robinson.

THE wig maker heaved a sigh so profound that the puffs he was combing lovingly fluttered to the floor. "It's the small hats," he made moan, "the small hats that will ruin me! No more puffs, no more curls, no more nothing!"

And verily did he speak truth, for while elaborate coiffures may be seen by night, the plainer styles, classic in their simplicity, prevail overwhelmingly by day. Women have discovered that it is not a safe proceeding to twist their wisps of hair into a tight little bun, pull their smart little tresses down about their ears, and sally forth trusting to luck that the occasion will not require their removal. So they have adopted simple methods of hairdressing, which while permitting perfect fit of the small hat, does not betray Nature's parody.

Thus the coiled effects, arranged close to the head, have had a continuous popularity, and in several new forms will be much seen this season. Steady and consistent advertising is what makes business grow.

There is a strong tendency, however, to dress the hair quite a bit higher on the head, and with the high coiffure in view the wig makers should check up, because it will no doubt mean a return of flatter hair fashions.

Just now the classic Egyptian knot is much in evidence. A study should be made of the profile to determine at just what height the Psyche should be worn, for no style of hairdressing so emphasizes the tilt of one's nose and the set of one's chin. To dress the hair in this manner, part off the front of the hair as for a pompadour and comb forward. This may be waved or not as suits the face. The remainder of the hair is then combed back and tied at the base of the crown of the head, just above the nape of the neck. A foundation, or net, is then placed across the back of the head.

Now divide the back hair into three strands, rolling the middle strand into a big puff, which should be pinned lengthwise and so as to cover the entire part of the foundation. The two remaining strands may now be twisted together lightly and coiled about the puff. The ends of the front portion of hair should be twisted into a tight coil and then tucked under the coils about the knot. The French twist—not so hard, tight, sleek affair of twenty years ago, but a soft, fluffy roll of hair extending from the crown of the head to the nape of the neck—the French twist is especially attractive when the front hair is parted and rolled up away from the neck. The woman who has had trouble in concealing the stiff pointed top of her switch and the unyielding stems will be glad to know of two comparatively new ways in which the switch is made up. One is simply not made up at all; it is just a wavy plait with soft curls at either end, which may be manipulated in any number of ways. The other method is to fasten the hair to a soft soft ring, which makes stemming unnecessary, and facilitates rest, natural hairdressing.

What the Dainty Woman Wears About the House

Copyright, 1911, by I. J. Robinson.
K INOMAS of a good quality of silk, in delightful designs and colorings, and edged with wide bands of satin, may be bought for $3.50.

A novel negligee seen in one of the shops owed its original style to the very wide, pointed revers that turned back from the opening at the throat on one side only, and extended below the waist, where the narrow point was finished with a long tassel. The left edge of the garment was simply stitched, as was the bottom of the sleeves and the skirt, and was brought over to the side to fasten with two large buttons, just beneath the tasseled end of the revers. Undersleeves of material matching this revers completed the attractive little boudoir robe.

The sailor collar is well adapted for use on dressing sack or tea gown. In sheer embroidery with a lace trim about the edge they are seen on both silk and cotton models. For $1.95 one may get a very dainty matinee of igured lawn having a sailor collar, and wide cuffs, made from the same material, but edged with lace and insertion. A most elaborate matinee of all-over lace with a lining of pale blue silk suggested the possibility of a home-made copy, in which an old lace waist or gown and the satin lining of last year's party gown might be used. The all-over lace of the model, which was in pointed effect about the bottom, had blue silk tassels to finish each point.

The lines of the new tea gowns follow very closely the trend of the styles in other garments. The crushed giraffe has displaced the Empire effects, the side closing is much used, and pretty cutaway effects are obtained by the use of lace applied in a sort of coat tail effect that begins from the center of the front.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE SUMMER LINGERIE.

Many of the new night gowns are trimmed with lace about the hem, and some are slashed up at either side, with lace outlining the slashes.

For the woman who does not care for the combination garments the chemise with fitted back should prove satisfactory. The garment is cut with a small inverted plait just below the waist line, which makes it fit snugly about the waist.

Very dainty, if not quite practicable, are the night gowns of white, pink or blue crepe de chine, trimmed with Normandy val about the yokes and sleeves. Cotton crepe is gaining in favor for lingerie, and especially for gowns, because of the ease with which it may be laundered.

A clever way to make the popular combination garments, so that the combination may be severed if one desires, is to finish the top of the drawers and the bottom of the corset cover with separate bands of bending. One ribbon may be run through them both, so that either garment may be changed very easily.

There is little change in the corsets for this season, a fact which pleases Madame mightily, though it grieves the corset-maker sorely. They remain very supple, very long and medium low in the bust.

To be perfectly correct these days one must appear to be a guiltless of stays as a school girl. The ugly hip line of the old models has been eliminated by snug, smooth skirts of the fabric, and the bust line may now be concealed by the almost indispensable brassiere.

A style of corset that is steadily gaining in favor is what is called the topless corset, which extends only two inches to three inches above the waist. This model is particularly desirable for the woman of slender build, or for one who is athletically inclined, and when worn with a well fitted brassiere gives great freedom of movement.

THE FIFIELD-DEAN LUMBER CO.

AVALON, WIS.

Copyright, 1912, by I. J. Robinson.

THE graceful La Valliere, which not only fulfills the mission of a pretty piece of jewelry, but is carefully chosen, may add the necessary emphasis of color to a costume, has so enslaved the feminine fancy that each season sees many new designs in these necklaces. Though not particularly expensive, many of them have a very rich appearance when they are of worthy design and given an antique finish. Lapis, jade, moonstones, amethysts, topaz, and the abalone pearls are most frequently used, while the antique silver finish seems to be preferred.

An attractive novelty are the necklaces which show a clever use of cut silver. Strung on a slender silver chain are from six to eight or more pendant stones—these noticed were amethysts, turquoise and topaz—which appear to be surrounded with rhinestones, but which in reality simply brilliantly polished silver cut in similar facets.

Necklaces of the Italian filigree silver will be suitable for wear with the dainty summer gowns. The delicate Italian mosaic work in its wonderful blues, that suggest southern skies is used for many necklaces, with sometimes a cameo as the center pendant, or a small enameled pansy or other small flower. Necklaces of gold-plated filigree, in beautiful designs, Egyptian or Etruscan in origin, may be bought for six and eight dollars.

Bracelets, in hand effect, of the gold-plated filigree, are equally reasonable. What promises to be a very charming feature is the revival of the bracelet that has attached to it a tiny ring through which the handkerchief is slipped. Bracelets that broaden into an oval section large enough to contain a tiny vanity case in which are concealed a diminutive puff and a dust of powder, are among the interesting novelties in an exclusive shop.

The black velvet neck bands with their silver of rhinestones will no doubt be much worn with the fashions in gowns this summer, as they seem especially suited to this quaint style. Belt buckles are another feature that the present modes of dress will popularize to a great extent. These are of generous size, of both the buckle and pin variety.

Barrettes for the hair are considerably smaller, and in anticipation of the high hair dressing which is returning to favor, the very small round and oval gold barrettes are being shown again. Rhinestone hair ornaments and barrettes are much seen, as well as a wide variety of pins ornamented with carved silver or gold.

Do you remember the crocheted finger pieces that our mothers used to carry years ago—long, narrow affairs, with a slit in the center, lengthwise, which was kept closed by means of a couple of small rings that could be slipped back and forth? Bags of this style, much enlarged and elaborated, are among the many new designs that have been added to the already large assortment of these convenient accessories. In silk or brocade, trimmed with fringe or tassels, these ring bags would not be difficult to make at home. One might copy a very stunning one which was made from green and blue tulle. Both sides had a wide design carried out at the end in steel beads. One end was left straight and edged with cut steel fringe, while the other, mitered in three-cornered shape, was drawn into a cut steel tassel.

American Fashions in Furniture

By Marie Evelyn Stuart

Copyright, 1912, by J. J. Robinson.

IN the old days, before the advent of the Woman's Page and Household Magazine, the arts and craft movement and the American Renaissance, with their flood of theory and fact, wisdom and fancy, information on periods and opinions as to the merits of specially designed furniture, furnishing a room or a home was comparatively a simple matter. Then one merely took one's money and purchased whatever the furniture dealer, in one's native town, suggested. Now the housewife, or householder, actual or to be, must take time and thought as well as money, and, alas, the wealth of styles and information on styles, leads to no small amount of confusion.

For a while, period decoration fairly obsessed the decorative world, but happily its rage has subsided—its fury having perhaps spent itself on a few blue hotels and the like. True we do see period houses and period rooms, good and bad, but for the most part American taste seems to run toward two characteristic American styles, in furnishing as in architecture, the Colonial and the modern Arts and Crafts design, or designs of a mission origin.

There is much to be said in favor of both these styles, including the fact that they are native to the soil. Colonial mahogany, with white enamel panelings, is always a beautiful, calm, dignified and stately style of furnishing—elegant, but simple and substantial, like the early aristocracy of our land. In a house whose architecture is of this type, such furnishings give the final touch of nobility. A rather large house always develops itself harmoniously along these lines, and one does not regret seeing Colonial effects obtain so firm a hold on the American fancy.

The term Colonial, however, is a loose one, as furnishings in this style may show Sherraton, Hepplewhite, Chippendale, Georgian or William and Mary lines. These were the models of the Colonial craftsmen who wrought conceits a trifle heavier and simpler, by reason of the fact that they possessed fewer tools and less craftsmanship. It was through these very limitations, however, that they achieved distinction and created a style. The modified Mission and Arts and Crafts designs, representative of present day taste, in furniture, resembles the Colonial in being simple. They surpass it in simplicity, however, and sometimes seem even to savor of the crude. Nevertheless, a well executed interior along these lines, with low beam ceiling, rough, plain brick fireplace, dark wood furniture, many paned, leaded casement windows, bits of simple crude, blue toned pottery, basket work, hand-woven or Indian rugs, old pieces of pewter, copper and china, indiged with Arts and Crafts designs in the same vases, possesses both a richness and a restfulness, the charm of subdued and mellow colors and simple lines, creating an atmosphere of coziness and comfort.

The bungalow, thus furnished, is the product of the thought and taste of our day. How future generations shall regard it is a question, but we believe it has found a place in our national life and that its spirit of simple substantial sincerity is in keeping with our Democratic principles. All in all as the flower of our American Renaissance, there seems to be no reason why we should not be proud of it.

Quaint and Clever Floor Coverings

Copyright, 1912, by J. J. Robinson.

Go up to the attic and bring down grandmother's old plaited or woven rag rug. You can use them without fear of reproach, for they are again the mode, thanks to the Arts and Craft movement. If grandmother failed to leave you any of these proofs of her industry and skill, why let us hope that she left you the industry and skill to fashion a few for yourself.

If you live in a city, or town, where the Arts and Craft movement is in full swing, you will find there are quite a number of craftsmen, or art dyers. Take them your rugs, and they will dye them, in lovely, soft shades, with vegetable dyes—shades that will take on what artists call a "tone" with wear, and age into greater beauty. There are some shades of blue, particularly, which are simply exquisite, dull, soft and pleasing, in perfect harmony with dark oak furniture or lighter floors.

Wool rugs make the handsomest rugs and monotonous, or two-toned effects are considered the most artistic. If you haven't the time, material or inclination for such handwork, you can purchase fine examples in the Arts and Crafts Shops—or pretty wool carpets and rugs, in similar effects, from the regular dealers. Some very simple, heavily woven, woolen rugs have found their way to the market recently, so that for a very low price the home may be outfitted with really tasteful floor coverings.

Old Brussels and Ingrain carpets are converted into attractive looking woven rugs, which might be made quite handsome, by dyeing all the old material to one color, when the different shades of the original carpet would produce lighter and darker variations of the color scheme.

In buying figured rugs, it is well to select those in Oriental pattern, and a small, broken design will be found to keep its look better and show dust less than a larger and more open one.

In selecting Oriental rugs one should be careful to choose patterns of sufficient similarity, in design and color, for one room, so that they may not clash or give a patch-work effect. Too many rugs often prove as distressing as too few, in fact producing an oppressive, rather than an impressive aspect. It is always wise to sacrifice quantity to quality in household furnishings, and especially in this true of floor coverings, which more than anything else are subjected to a rigid taste by severe usage, under our sharp-heeled, hard-soled shoes. Perhaps when we become truly civilized, we shall be guided by the wisdom of the ancient civilizations of the Orient, and leave our street shoes beside the door, donning soft slippers, free from the dirt and germs of the street, for house-wear, and more gentle in the treatment of our carpets and rugs. Until such time, however, we shall be obliged to exercise great discrimination as to the wearing qualities of these floor coverings.

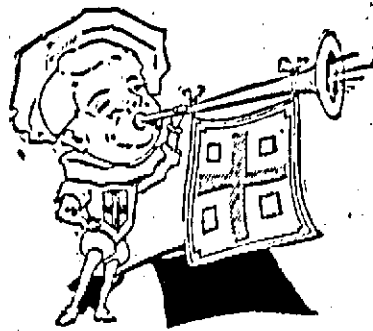

The "WIRED-for-Electricity" House Gets Along Remarkably Well Without a Servant.

She is not needed to do the washing—the electric washer takes care of that—does it better—faster.

Ironing with the modern electric iron is such easy, pleasant work that the housekeeper likes to do it herself.

Vacuum cleaning is the only sure, sanitary way to get rid of dirt, servant or no servant.

The electric fan removes all the disagreeable features of hot weather work.

If she has to choose between the two—electricity and servant—the wise housekeeper chooses electricity every time.

Then it saves so much money—even the light it furnishes is today the most economical light.

By using the "Mazda Tungsten Lamps" the house can be lighted at two-fifths the former cost.

NEW IDEAS IN CHINAWARE GLASSWARE AND POTTERY

Copyright, 1912, by I. J. Robinson.

The table ware of a home or a Nation is generally considered a reliable index to the taste and refinement of its people. In nothing else are there greater possibilities of grace and beauty, wider variety of lovely forms or more exquisite color combinations. The house wife who does not rejoice in her cut glass and china is indeed a "rare avis in terra," and unfortunately it is from this very taste for pretty things that the greatest decorative dangers may arise. Strong effects in great variety in patterns and tone mar the appearance of the table, the china cabinet or the dining-room. It is one must mix miscellaneous pieces and sets, it must be done at least most judiciously. For such arrangements, however, there are no rules, one can only rely on an innate sense of harmony which, if they possess will prove a sufficient guide, and which if they lack, advice can scarcely supply.

In china, heavy decoration is to be avoided. It is permissible indeed upon mere show pieces, but often sadly out of place on articles designed for the practical serving of food. The after dinner coffee is the only exception to this rule, and that because the beverage itself is of oriental origin, and a decoration in keeping with the ornate spirit of the East is therefore not inappropriate.

In glass it is well to prefer Rock Crystal, Bohemian and Austrian wares to the more ordinary cut glass, though in the best patterns this is still the mode upon well appointed tables.

The use of glass, china and pottery for purely ornamental purposes seems to gain popularity daily, and indeed no more effective decoration is possible than some gem of the Ceramic Art carefully chosen and well placed. A rich climax to a rightly planned color scheme, may often be achieved in a bright toned bit of pottery amid surroundings of deeper hues in a shaded nook or corner.

As an adjunct to flower arrangements, pottery is to be highly considered, and for this purpose, simple forms in plain finish are most suitable and pleasing.

There are many exquisite American wares on the market whose plain, unadorned mat surface in soft greens, bright purples, yellows, reds and browns, or whose simply adorned exteriors, with suggestive floral or landscape treatments in variations of the self tones, blend harmoniously or contrast delightfully with the varied hues of flowers and greenery.

Cement in age toned effects, plaster in ivory finishes, brass and copper receptacles are often likewise lovely backgrounds for growing plants or flowers.

Art lamps are another decorative feature of the modern home, and here we have the widest latitude of choice imaginable. Standing lamps or side wall fixtures are as a rule preferred to the central chandelier, though this is still permissible with the right settings.

In choosing fixtures, one should look well to their appropriateness for the interior, and be sure that they do not in any way clash with the colors, line, or period of the general decorations.

For standing lamps and table lamps, the lady of the household may often fashion the most wonderful shades upon simple wire foundation frames with her own fair fingers, finding abundant suggestions for reproduction or adaptation in the decorators' shops or the lamp departments of our large stores.

Artistic Wall Treatments

Copyright, 1912, by I. J. Robinson.

THERE are two ways of approaching the decoration of our walls, according as our tastes do, or does not run towards pictures. For the lover of these, there is only one form of wall treatment—the simplest, flattest, and least complicated—offering an ideal background for the framed gems of his collection. Plain, unfigured wall paper, and wall coverings, generally, are for this reason, a wide vogue, as have also those in which the figure is modulated and quiet, low in tone and in relief.

Much is to be said in favor of these plain walls, in soft dull tones, cool or rich as suits the fancy of the householder. Simple panelings also possess the same virtues and the same charms and one can scarcely make a mistake in choosing these effects.

There are, however, on the other hand, arrangements as graceful, as artistic, as elaborate, in carefully worked-out dados, friezes and panels, presenting in themselves a complete scheme of embellishment, similar in feeling to mural painting.

In libraries and dining-rooms, particularly, these dados and frieze effects are appropriate and charming. The mistake of hanging pictures on such walls should be avoided, and even plates, mugs, stels, etc., should be omitted from the plate rail of the average dining-room, thus decorated.

A landscape pattern, or a vine-hung lattice does not look well when broken by a stool or a plate. The effect is illogical and inharmonious.

In general, one should always avoid heaping embellishment upon embellishment, as the result is as absurd as "to gild refined gold, or paint the lily."

There is a certain quiet harmony about frieze and dado decoration, unbroken by any other adornment. Its virtue is restfulness—its danger, monotony.

Many find an agreeable compromise in having the walls of the living room plain, with many pictures, the bedroom daintily panelled, with cretonnes matching in pattern the flower festoons which border the panelings, and library and dining-room in frieze effect with plate rail and book-cases.

Here indeed we have that variety which is the "spice of life."

REHBERG'S

WE wonder if you realize your fullest powers--you're a "season-maker" as much as nature herself is. The first crocus or the first spring robin aren't nearly as important evidences of spring as the first spring suit or the first spring overcoat. We're ready to outfit some hundreds of "season-makers"—outfit them as they would be outfitted. And it makes no difference how precise or exacting their demands may be, we take particular joy in serving the man who refuses to be satisfied with anything short of the attainable best. You're very likely a man of that sort; you wouldn't be reading this advertisement if you weren't. Here's the facts:

At $15 the price the average store slights, we've put in some of our best "licks." The man who buys a $15 suit or overcoat here gets a garment that will satisfy from the first day he judges it for style to the last day he judges it for wear. Sizes 33 to 50. You'll be satisfied.

At $25 you'll see a display of suits and overcoats that is a fitting demonstration of this store's success. You'll find silk lined garments that satisfy every requirement of the man who isn't usually satisfied unless he pays far more. And with our customary thoroughness, you'll find every size from 33 to 48 stout, regulars and slims.

At $20 you can let your choosing, run riot. You aren't hampered by having your choice narrowed down to a few garments. There are hundreds of suits and overcoats in our $20 range; not one of them was put there until we were satisfied that it would satisfy you. Sizes 33 to 48.

At $30 you'll realize the fallacy of the tailor habit—graphically. You'll find finer fabrics, newer models, handsomer patterns and more pleasing colors than you ever thought possible to secure at the price. But descriptions are so inadequate and inspection so convincing that we advise seeing them. Sizes 35 to 42.

THIS is a Young Men's Store that doesn't believe in showing older men's apparel in young men's sizes. Our young men's stocks are selected with the express purpose of giving young men a clothes individuality of their own..... $10.00 to $25.00

BECAUSE a Man's Trousers are but a third of a man's suit, some stores don't give them more than third-rate attention. Not so here; they get all the attention we know how to give them. Men's and Young Men's Trousers..... $3.00 to $7.00

SPRING HATS

Scrutinize that winter hat of yours the next time you doff it; then if inspection isn't pleasing leave the rest to us. We're ready with an assemblage of styles that's complete. First of all we'd like to show you the new Longley and "Smile" Hats, stiff shapes. $3.00, $2.50. Or if you prefer soft hats the Longley at $2.50 and $3.00 are splendid; other soft hats at $1.00 and $1.50.

FURNISHINGS

"More than I ever had to choose from before" a customer told us the other day. He was quite right, it's our largest display and our displays always have been large. Narrow four-in-hands or wide ones, with flowing ends; solid colors, self figures or diagonal stripes. White wash ties at 25c. Soft cuff shirts, Russia cord madras and French pattern shirts $1.00, $1.50, and $2.00.

Men's Shoes and Oxfords

You would not have the advantage of selecting your Spring Shoes or Oxfords from the greatest stock in Janesville if we hadn't been thinking of your needs months ago.

We planned for this to be the biggest week's business in our history. The result is we're ready with everything a man needs in Shoes.

New Tans, Dull Black Calf or Patent Leathers, the newest of stunning styles for the smart chaps, and hundreds of staple conservative shapes; we can fit any man's ideas—any pair of feet.

The models most in demand, at $3.50 and $4.00.

Ladies' Shoes and Oxfords

The dainty feminine note is strikingly evident in the New Spring Shoes and Oxfords, the beauty and variety of which have never been surpassed.

Exclusive women will find each design a beauty of workmanship and finish, and will pronounce them all unequalled in style and cut.

The high button boot is much in evidence this spring; our welt sole button boots in white and brown are decidedly smart.

Pumps and Oxfords in new models. Pumps with no straps are correct; in cravanottes, suedes, black, brown and all staple leathers $3.00 and $3.50.

CLOTHING AND SHOES

On The Bridge

By Orville G. Victor.

Copyright, 1912, by H. E. Robinson.

MEN'S garments, for spring and summer, 1912, will show a distinct difference from those of last year and the year before. This applies to overcoats and undercoats alike; also to vests and trousers, though not in such marked degree, perhaps, in regard to the latter.

"We are getting away from the tight English coat," said William D. Sharpe, a well-known tailor and draper of Fifth Avenue, New York City, who was, until a year ago, an official of the Custom Cutters' Club, and is a recognized authority on matters sartorial. "Coats for the coming season will be more as they were a few seasons ago. They will be cut in accordance with common-sense ideas. The exaggerated chest and shoulder will be noticeable only by their absence. In other words, a man's chest, in his coat, will appear where his chest ought to be."

This is entirely in consonance with the plans of the high-class ready-made trade, whose designers are not to be outdone by their "made-to-order" counterparts. Nearly without exception, drawings for spring and summer overcoats show nice, semi-shapely garments—not tight fitting, nor yet loose. The average overcoat will be neither long nor short, but will reach to the knees. The "patch" pockets and cut ornamentations will no longer be seen. In fact, all bizarre effects are to be carefully avoided. Nicely fitting, general garments, built along natural lines will have the call.

The dress overcoat, as usual, is to be made, as a rule, from a soft worsted. For general business wear and cutting, fancy chevrons will have the preference, though raglans and homespun will also be in favor. It is predicted that the "country coat" will meet with favor throughout the United States. This is well adapted to all the various uses to which an outer garment may be subjected; like the ordinary topcoat, it is made chiefly of cheviot, though the matter of fabric is, of course, one of individual choice with the wearer. These are to be made up chiefly in grays, as that color, in all shades, will continue to predominate in outer garments, both in stripes and solids. Brown is always a favorite with many, and makes up nicely with an almost imperceptible plaid, visible only by change of light, or with a tiny red or purple thread running through the weave, giving it just a suggestion of brighter coloring. Herringbones are losing favor; the oblique wale, especially in rough materials, will be in great demand.

Serges, Scotch chevrons and tweeds will predominate in the make-up of spring and summer suits and overcoats this year. The well-dressed man may take his choice from a countless variety of color combinations, including many novel arrangements of twills and compound mixtures, brown-grays, blue-grays, silver-grays; Chanticleer colorings, goblin blue mixtures, etc. Some of the light overcoats will have a tab on the sleeve, but most of them will be finished with a small, one-inch vent, with no button. In both the overcoat and the cutaway the length of the garment will be a little shorter, and the waist line will be higher than last season's. Except in overcoats, stripes will not be greatly in evidence, and when seen on ordinary day garments they will be very close and narrow.

According to some of the best known makers of good clothes, who are familiar with conditions throughout the country, the Norfolk is coming into great favor, and will be worn during the coming season more generally than ever before. These are to be made up with three buttons and the soft roll effect. Some will carry a belt all the way around the waist, but for the most part they will have a demi-belt, extending from side seam to side seam in the back. In these the most popular color is a blue-gray; they will be worn largely for motoring, golf and all out-door sports. Made up from fancy serges and worsteds, in stripes and figures, the Norfolk is a most attractive garment that can be worn at practically every outdoor function.

The ordinary business, or sack coat, will be made more or less close fitting, following the style of the cutaway and the topcoat. They will have two or three buttons, and five-button vests to match. The latter will not be so high-cut as heretofore, and after the winter season is past it will no longer be considered proper to have the vest show above the coat-opening when the top button of the coat is buttoned, except when the coat has the soft roll front. The vest will carry two buttons, and the opening will be wider than the present style demands.

A nice coat for younger men is of conservative cut and pattern of dark gray, brown or blue, with the edges bound. The coat carries four buttons, two side pockets with flaps to go in or out, and a welted breast pocket. The vest is of the same material, also bound at the edge, with five buttons and an inverted "V" at the bottom.

Another coat that will no doubt find many admirers among men of all ages is a double-breasted, form-fitting garment with three buttons; this will be made up in all colors and shades, with one, two and three buttons on the cuff. With it should be worn a six-button vest, collarless—that is, when a vest is worn; the coat itself is well adapted to be part of a two-piece suit in warm weather, with trousers of the same material and color, or of lighter fabric and shade.

A blue serge form-fitting sack, with three buttons will find many admirers. With the soft-roll coat goes a vest made up skeleton, and literally as "light as a feather." All coats, sack and cutaway, have a button-hole in the left lapel. Some coats of dark material will be made up with turned back cuffs, but no button. These, it is predicted, will meet an enthusiastic reception from young men of the "college" type.

For those who do not care for the soft roll English model with three buttons and an inverted plait back; these are to be made of homespun, tweeds, cassimeres and vicunas; although they will have three buttons, only the middle one is supposed to be fastened. These will be found very "smart," and will doubtless meet with well-nigh universal approval.

Coats for cutting suits—two-piece suits—will for the most part have turn-back cuffs, and the trousers will be finished in the same manner. But this will pertain to cutting suits only; cuffs on trousers for ordinary wear will not be permissible. These suits will be made for the most part of serges, Scotch chevrons and tweeds, though some velours will be worn. As spring advances, serges and homespuns will be worn in increasing numbers, and will be found in a long range of grays and browns, mostly stripes of inconspicuous design.

Returning to overcoats, a brilliant future is predicted for the "guard" coat, specially adapted for wear in rough weather, useful when boating, motoring, or to guard against the possibilities of sudden summer showers. This coat may be obtained in practically all standard colors and shades, in light and waterproof fabrics. It is made with a convertible collar, which gives it a semi-military effect when turned up, and a belt from pleat to pleat. It is decidedly nobby in appearance; it keeps its shape well, and is really an ideal garment for many occasions. This convertible collar feature is meeting with great success everywhere, as it serves a double capacity, and is dressy in either capacity.

The two-button Tuxedo is coming into favor again, especially with the younger men. It is cut on very sharply lines, with very little fulness in the skirts.

An imported French novelty is a one-button, square-cut Tuxedo, in brown as well as black, with four buttons and braided edge. A white silk vest is preferably worn with this.

Demi-vests are dying, and it seems that their knell of doom has been sounded for the coming season at least; though they may return to favor next winter.

The formal dress coat which will make its appearance about Easter will be form-fitting, but not closely so. It will have no exaggerated shoulder or chest effect; it will fit snugly but not tightly, with plain edges and no ornamentation of the cuffs. The waist line will be a little higher than at present, and the coat will carry three buttons, one and a quarter inches apart. Lapels will be peaked, and a trifle wider than those of last season, and about 2 1/2 of an inch wider than the collar.

The trousers will fit a little more snugly than of late, and will reach just to the top of the heel. The seams will be devoid of braid.

Fads and Fancies in Spring Haberdashery

By Orville G. Victor.

continue in favor with men who can afford to buy a good garment. Like the French zephyr prints, the Russian cord wears exceptionally well and is always dressy. These will appear mostly in stripes.

The turn-back cuffs, known as the French cuffs, will be quite as popular in soft materials as last summer. These negligees can be purchased in various materials for from $2.50 to $5.00.

Another garment which will meet with much favor is the silk-and-lisle, made up soft, in solid colors and stripes, with the turn-back cuffs and detachable collars. These look quite as well as pure silk, and may be bought from $3 up.

These soft shirts will doubtless outclass the semi-stiff ones six to one during the coming season. Very light weight English wool taffetas make an ideal garment for hot weather wear; so does eyelet flannel. The silk and linen makes up nicely for semi-starched shirts, being made mostly in narrow pleats, some in white and others in contrasting colors.

In the selection of neckwear the buyer may suit his individual fancy without stint. The big scrolls, known as Persian designs, made of the best grades of silk, are appearing in particularly attractive manner. But the knitted stuff is far and away ahead of all competitors, and will be worn more generally than ever before.

The moderate priced "college stripes," accordion weave and plain silk will be a favorite among the younger element. The accordion weave is considered the nicer, and with the horizontal stripes representing the colors of different colleges and universities, is sure to be a great favorite, showing the black and orange of Princeton, the violet and white of Amherst, the purple and gold of the Northwestern University, the maroon and white of Lafayette, etc., countless combinations, each one of which has its own special significance.

Not unlike the Persian scrolls are four-in-hands of Japanese silk in "butterfly" designs. These will doubtless become quite popular, and will be made up in A-1 shapes a little later. One of the newest and most striking color combinations in these big scrolls is known as "smoke" and red.

Ties of solid colors will not be wanting, either; royal, purple, dark greens, blues and reds in numerous shades will be worn plentifully. The basket weave in attractive stripe combinations will sell largely in the less expensive ties.

Some imported English neckwear is going to attract considerable attention and will doubtless become very popular with men who pay particular attention to this dress accessory. These include the Spitalfields and the Maclefield silks, made up for the most part in Persian designs, with wide flowing ends.

Fancy vests, which were not much in evidence last year, will be very largely worn until the heat of summer induces the wearing of two-piece suits. These will be made of linen, silk, crash and other materials. A new one, that is quite a novelty, is of Angora goat fur. Contrary to what might be expected, this is well adapted to spring wear, for it is almost feather-weight;

it is made without lining and shows the animal's hair long and fuzzy. This garment is generally gray; but if it meets with approval, it will appear in various colors.

A nice line of handkerchiefs has been provided for spring and summer, showing colors in profusion. A novelty in this line, that is not apt to meet with general favor, is of red silk, patterned after the old-fashioned bandanna that the American farmer is popularly supposed to carry in his hat.

A white silk handkerchief, with black polka dots, promises to sell largely; so does a fine white Irish linen with colored borders in contrast stripes. Others are made in scroll designs; and some of light blues and lavenders are particularly adapted to the seasons of violets and roses.

Haberdashers generally throughout the country report enormous sales of "guarantee" socks—that is, footwear guaranteed to last six months, with ordinary wear. Several brands of these were placed on the market and largely advertised for the winter trade. Their sale throughout the holiday season was fairly phenomenal—so much so, that the manufacturers have been encouraged to make the same brands in lighter weights for spring and summer. As a rule, these sell at two dollars for six pairs, and dealers have been keeping their word as to substituting new ones for those which have not kept up to the requisitions. I am told that about one-twelfth per cent are returned.

The soft collar will not be in evidence this summer. It has been tabooed as untidy in appearance, and very few haberdashers are putting it in stock. The old-fashioned, comfortable low collar, formerly worn chiefly by stout men, will be a general favorite this season; it will not be necessary for a man to choke himself in the hot weather with a high, starched neckyoke.

The man of moderate income will find no difficulty in satisfying his wants and pleasing his personal taste in the matter of shirts, collars, neckties, handkerchiefs and all the various dress accessories which the haberdashery shops have in stock for the spring and summer season of 1912.

Among the newest of shirt-stuffs provided are the French zephyr prints; these are more expensive than the ever-popular madras, but they stand the torture of the laundry well and always look nobly. These promise to lead all others in English markets, and will no doubt find general favor in the United States as well.

Expensive silk shirts, from $8 to $15 of light Japanese weave, tempt the pocketbook. Semi-stiff shirts will be worn more than last summer, when everything was soft; these are provided in madras, percale and gingham. In the less expensive shirtings, made up in stripes and figures, Russian cords, made up plain and in pleats, will

"In the spring the young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."

SO Thompson says in his poem "Locksley Hall," but the young man's fancy also turns to thoughts of a new hat just before the blue bird's note is heard throughout the land and the golden-bued dandelion makes its appearance to the disgust of the man who falls would have a velvet lawn.

The young man—and the middle-aged man and the old man, too—will be able to choose from a well-nigh countless profusion of headgear this season. For formal dress, the silk hat will take the place of the long-popular open hat. No reason is given for this change—it may simply be ascribed to the vagaries of fashion; but it must be admitted that the silk hat is far more genteel in appearance than the one that may be collapsed and carried under the arm. A flat brim and a 5% such crown will be the correct style.

Soft hats, which during the past year have been sold as never before, will continue in general favor throughout the year; as a rule, these will be comfortable and becoming. The "frock" hat has been abolished, although one may be seen now and then on a man with receding chin or other evidence of weakness.

The most popular of these soft hats this spring will be found in the old favorite Alpine, and the Panturlet, shaped with brim roll in the back. The rough duck hats will continue in evidence, and the "scratch-up" with soft finish; but they will be toned down and will present a nice, refined appearance.

The fashion of wearing a cloth hat of the same material as the overcoat, quite popular among a certain set last fall, is doomed to extinction, and will not be welcomed this spring. Cloth hats will be worn and in great number, but they will not be made to match the coat. In fact, the style will call for contrast in this respect, and for the most part solid colors will be in demand.

The fine velour will be worn much for early spring, with medium crown and a crease in the center. These are made of the French "coney," as the skin of our domestic rabbit is, as a rule, too coarse for the purpose. A turban brim, to turn down or up according to the whim of the wearer, is another feature of the velour.

The 1912 derby will have a low crown and a wide brim, known as the P'Orsay brim, a French style. The fad of wearing the derby upon the back of the head has been abandoned even by the "college boys."

Straws are being provided in as many different styles as last summer. Favorite among these will be the sonnets and splits, with low crowns and wide brims; but some will prefer the higher crown and narrower brim, and there will be plenty of these on the market. The pencil curl mackinaw will be among this summer's favorite also, and the Banket, which proved so popular last year, is expected to repeat its success this summer.

WHEN the wintry winds have ceased to blow and signs of spring remind us of sunny days to come, Young America will find many new garments that have been fashioned for his special benefit. Some of these are distinctly his own so far as fabric and style are concerned; others are borrowed from, or copied after, the garments of father or big brother.

Of the latter, one of the most pleasing is seen in the soft roll, three button, English model Norfolk, known as the Junior, in tan, brown, blue and blue-gray. These are for the larger boys.

For the little chaps, from two and a half to ten years of age, Russian blouse suits and sailor suits will be shown, some with sailor collar and others with the flon.

A Norfolk suit, specially designed for boys from five to ten years old, shows a more shapely jacket than ordinary, that contributes to the youthful appearance of the wearer. These are made up plain, both single and double breasted; some have patch pockets, and others have the ordinary pocket, with flaps to go in or out.

For the older boys, say from nine to seventeen years of age, Norfolk jackets will not be so popular as in the past. The so-called old-fashioned double-breasted coats, with trousers and vest of the same material, are coming to their own again, and will be largely worn during 1912. These will be made for the most part from blue unfaded serge, worsted, cassimere and chevrons. Stripes will not be so prevalent as mixtures in these suits for youths, except in the chevrons, where stripes are always considered good. With these suits either knickerbockers or full length trousers may be obtained of the same material.

A single-breasted, two-button jacket of homespun, with inverted pleat, makes a very smart garment for the carefully dressed boy who wants something just a little different from the regulation Norfolk.

For the larger boys, the English cut coat will undoubtedly continue in favor; made with a roll lapel, and a high-cut vest that shows above the three buttons of the coat, and with trousers of the same material, all made fairly form-fitting, this produces a really snappy suit, one that any boy may well be proud of.

All trousers for boys over 14 years old will have cuffs on the bottoms of the legs, which, like those designed for their elders, will come only to the heels.

Following the fashion of the man, overcoats of light material, with convertible collars, which, when turned up, give the boys the appearance of military cadets, will appear simultaneously with the rest of their spring apparel. Some of these are made with pleats to the shoulder; others with yokes.

Very good style is shown in the light Norfolk overcoat for boys, with a pleat running to the shoulder, and a belt all the way around. These are made chiefly from blue serge and fancy chevrons, and form an ideal outdoor garment for spring, and, in the cooler late studies, for summer nights.

For formal functions the small boy must wear during the coming season a three-button tuxedo with white vest and knickerbockers (black) finished with three buttons at the knee. Black silk stockings, oxford shoes, a frilled white shirt with collar attached, and a soft silk tie of any becoming color, complete the costume. The larger boy may wear a shirt with stiff bosom, a polo collar and regulation "black" or white bow tie.

Spring and Summer 1912 Styles in Men's Footwear

By Orville G. Victor.

Copyright, 1912, by T. J. Robinson.

THE Saturday immediately preceding Easter Sunday is welcomed by shoe dealers all over the country, and especially by those in the large cities, for more shoes are sold on that day than any other in the year. This is a curious fact, but fact it is, and borne out by the statements of dealers generally.

Buyers tell me that the tan shoe which had such phenomenal sales last year—and, indeed, right up to the present time—will not be so popular throughout the coming spring and summer season, for it is to be supplanted to a large extent by the patent leather, which is once more to assume precedence with well-dressed men.

This does not mean, of course, that the tan shoe is to be eliminated; it is far too popular and useful to be displaced altogether by any other article of footwear. But for the last year it has been worn generally to business and all sorts of informal functions, both in oxfords and high uppers; and this will not be the case this year. It is now three or four years since patent leathers have been in favor, but, according to those who know, they are coming back into their own in 1912.

For outing shoes, tans or blacks with white canvas and buck uppers will be worn by both men and women. Pumps, of patent or other fine leather, will be made on a straight last, with one or two ties.

The raised toe, or so-called "bull-dog" effect, which has been worn mostly in the West for the last two seasons, is seen on most of the oxfords designed for the season's wear throughout the entire country.

Shoes with high uppers, both laced and buttoned, will adhere more closely to the English last, with straight toe of moderate height and heels not more than an inch or an inch and a quarter in height. The laced shoe carries eight fastenings; the buttoned shoe as many as seven, in contradistinction to the five that have been in favor for the last year or more.

Spats with the oxford will be worn more generally than for several seasons past. To be correct, these will carry six buttons; they are made mostly of canvas, in greys, tans, browns and black. The latter have buttons of contrasting color—mother-of-pearl for the most part; the colored spats have buttons of the same shade.

YOU ought to see our big window display now, for diversified spring shoes and Oxfords for man or boy. Not only for the business man, though we have many styles for them, but the young fellows, college and high school lads who want the "limit" in style—the low pump ties, the flat heels and custom lasts—this is their store; they know what they want, and they get it here. And the older men who look for special shoes and lasts—we've looked after them all, we've provided for their wants—thoroughly and individually. The finest stock in Janesville.

What Are You Getting Out Of Lent?

It may be part of your creed to observe Lent, or it may not be. But even if it isn't, the Lenten season has something for you, for truth and beauty and good are larger than creeds. And they are helpful to bring into life, no matter what may be one's belief. And though these are at your command at any time as much as during Lent, they seem to come nearer and to be more real during the Lenten season, than at any other time.

This probably is because the newspapers give some space to Lenten subjects, services in the churches are held more frequently than is usual, and a large part of the community are thinking, and perhaps talking, about religious matters. All such things create an atmosphere of thought, different from that which prevails when life flows along in customary channels.

And as this thought atmosphere is uplifting, even though one may not be a specific observer of Lent, it is well to get into it.

Many give no heed to Lent. Many others scarcely know there is such a season, except as they chance to see some reference to it in the papers, or a sign on a church tolling of special services. But all these people are missing something worth while, and not in a religious sense either.

They would be the better for stopping aside from their usual routine for a glimpse of things spiritual. They would go back to their business refreshed and better able to manage it, if they would drop all thought of it for a little while and meditate on some of the less material facts of life. The man or woman who seldom goes to church would be surprised to find the refreshment and the renewed interest in his everyday life he would get by dropping into some of the noon-hour services held every day in the business sections of some large cities. He would be lifted out of his everyday materialistic atmosphere with its frosts and worries into a world, where calm and peace and ideals of an entirely different nature rule. And he would find the change enjoyable.

It is difficult to believe this until the experiment is tried. But ten or fifteen minutes spent at one of these services will be a revelation to many a man and woman.

Now of us are satisfied to believe that this life is all. Nor are we satisfied with the mere material things of this existence. So, while special opportunities are all about, why not make use of them to catch glimpses and meditate upon and find out more of our spiritual self and of other worlds that may be about us? It will certainly do no harm, and it may yield some treasures of which we now little dream.

The daily problem of keeping with in a certain allowance and seeing that nothing is wasted is a constant one.

When you have a few sweet potatoes left from a meal, slice them, sprinkle with brown sugar and bits of butter and bake in the oven.

Escalloped potatoes prepared from cold boiled potatoes and a little white sauce and onion juice sprinkled with green peas, also a left-over, makes another appetizing dish.

When you have a little strong cream cheese left over, grate it and mix with a beaten white of egg, season with salt, cayenne and pack in the cheese jars or serve on circles of toast and heat. To be served with tea.

Ginger bread baked in thin sheets, cut in rounds and put together sandwich fashion with cream or cottage cheese makes delicious little tea cakes.

When a little pastry is left and one has time to do it, very pretty little baskets may be made by putting the pastry over inverted patty pans and baking. For the handles, twist the pastry in strips and lay around a baking powder can to bake. Fill the baskets with preserves or ice and insert the handles. These make very effective desserts.

If one has a bit of orange marmalade left over, add it to the mince meat.

Cold vegetables of all kinds may be converted into good salads. If there are several varieties, season and pile them in groups with parsley in between. Carrots, green peas and potatoes, a few of each, in this way make a good mixed salad, and one can take the preferred vegetable when being served.

When making a dessert for dinner, like a custard, just do not add the sugar until some of the thickened curd is removed, and that may be flavored with vanilla and sweetened. The rest may be seasoned for salad dressing, the one process doing for both dishes.

DIET AND HEALTH HINTS

BERIBERI CURED BY CHANGE FROM POLISHED TO UNPOLISHED RICE.

Army surgeons in the Philippines who noticed that the civilian natives who ate only polished rice became free from beriberi, tried feeding the native soldiers on the unpolished rice and have discovered that the terrible disease then disappears. Attention has frequently been called in these hints to the superiority of unpolished rice. No specific disease has been traced to fine white flour, but fresh white bread in combination with flesh is undoubtedly the commonest cause of bowel troubles, especially appendicitis, as such combination tends to induce serious fermentation. When these articles of food are eliminated and the entire grain substituted such diseases will become rare.

Woman's Suffrage

Chicago, March 9, 1912.—The Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle denounces the action of the Wisconsin Suffragists in assuring the brewers that they are not affiliated with the Prohibition party, and brand such conduct "not manly."

In as much as the platforms of the Prohibitionists have, at times, been favorable to woman suffrage.

The Brooklyn paper seems to have acquired an enlarged idea of rectitude. It is not generally accepted that the ethics of politics or reform require that suffragists should coalesce with every organization that is favorable to woman suffrage, and the history of the movement indicates that it has been confined very distinctly within the limits of its own province.

In the particular case in point the suffragists neither repudiate prohibition nor do they seek the aid of the brewers; but, confining themselves to their own fight, it would seem that their attitude would be more properly defined as that of strict neutrality.

Returns from the Municipal election at Seattle (Wash.) show a majority of 645 for George F. Cotterill, who, it was thought during the campaign, had very slight chances of success since he was favorable to municipal ownership, the single tax, and prohibition. The returns, as analyzed, indicate that it was the votes of the women that elected Cotterill, as was the case in the recall of Gil from the office of Mayor last year.

In a trial ballot for President held by one of the Indiana Metropolitan Ballots, great preference was shown by the women for the prohibition candidate. But, as the Indiana editor expressed it, this does not necessarily indicate that women are pledged to prohibition candidates, but was merely the expression of a sentiment under circumstances where a vote meant little else. In an actual election they would most likely vote for one of the logical candidates who stood a chance to win.

Denver and Los Angeles have shown in recent elections that women are not so blinded by sentiment or to become the victims of subterfuge. Disfranchisement was headed by alleged prohibitionists with the view to capture the votes of the women. But the women discovered the fraud quicker even, it is claimed, than the men, and voted for the other party.

The recent outbreak in London of the militant suffragists of that city has occasioned more extensive newspaper notice and comment than any event of similar significance in recent years. In England, and on the continent the measure has been the most severe and uncompromising. In the United States the press has preserved a more even-tempered attitude. While there is no disposition in any quarter to condone the action of the suffragists, the criticism has been chiefly confined to the lawless aspect of the action itself with no general tendency anywhere manifested to denounce the women themselves as instinctively criminal, or to class them with the generally lawless and irresponsible element. It is often difficult to form a correct or even just opinion of the action of an individual or of an organization, when so far removed from the scene of its actual occurrence and in the absence of specific knowledge of the contributing causes. But as a general proposition it is safe to hold that a palpable violation of the law can only be satisfied by the infliction of the prescribed penalty, and but little clemency can be expected when the action of the offending persons results in loss and injury to innocent people. Furthermore, all such acts committed in the name of reform or as a means of redress of grievances, are of doubtful propriety under any circumstances, and are usually more harmful than beneficial to any cause.

The developments of the last week both for and against woman suffrage have been unusually pronounced, and are indicative of the momentous occurrences which the year 1912 will witness in the struggle over the question. Important among these is the hearing that will be given next week before committees of both houses of the National Congress, and while the feeling is general that, for the present at least, more immediate and substantial results are to be expected through the action of individual states with respect to this question, yet the fact that the Congress of the United States is giving the matter serious consideration as a National measure, is encouraging to the suffragists and indicates a significant and substantial growth of sentiment in behalf of the proposition.

The Anti-Suffrage organizations have recently exhibited an unusual degree of activity throughout the country, and they have announced their intention to contest the question at every point during the coming summer. In the Legislature of Maryland last week the woman suffrage bill was defeated in the lower house by the vote of 74 to 18 which is a decisive blow to equal rights for women in that state for two years at least. About the same time, however, the state of Ohio through its constitutional convention decided to submit the question to a vote of the people in connection with other proposed constitutional amendments, and a bill giving school suffrage to women passed both houses of the Kentucky legislature and will be received from Frankfort that it will be approved by the Governor.

UP-TO-DATE HOUSEKEEPING.

Right and Wrong Way to Make Sauces and Milk Toast.

By Alice E. Whitaker.

Old recipes often direct to add flour and cook until thick then serve. This method is correct if one is making paste but never to be followed in preparing food. Uncooked starch is an irritant and to cook it one minute, or just until the sauce or dessert is thick, and to offer it as a wholesome food shows great ignorance on the part of the cook.

This "dip" or gravy for milk toast needs at least twenty minutes in the double boiler when the starch will be more digestible and the gravy smooth and agreeable to the taste.

Physicians frequently order milk and cream toast for patients but in many cases they should add a warning against giving raw starch for the one minute of cooking does not greatly change the digestibility of the starch.

Milk toast is often listed in the housekeeper's mind as one of the foods to be made in a hurry. The result is then a gravy that tastes raw and like paste while the bread is charred on the outside and soft within because of a hasty attempt at toasting.

As a contrast to this I have in mind some toast set before me when as an invalid I was appealed to the appetite. The bread was cut in one inch cubes, laid on a plate and set in a moderate oven until of a deep brown color and well dried to the center. The gravy was smoothly, well cooked just right, and after cooking twenty minutes in a double boiler it was poured over the toast that was taken hot from the oven and served at once.

One may think that this is too much fuss to make over a dish of toast but who is assured that it did more than drugs could do. The quality was so fine that it tempted the appetite and it made the minimum lax on digestion for the reason that the starch in the bread, by drying and heating, was dextrinized. The starch in the gravy was also entirely cooked by the long time given to it and a food could hardly be less harmful than the toast thus prepared.

How to add thickening is another point. One way is to melt the butter in the dry flour, and when the mixture is frothy, add either hot or cold liquid and beat smooth then finish cooking. This is not a desirable way when the food is to be given to an invalid because butter, heated to a high temperature as it must be when cooked with flour, undergoes changes that make it to some degree indigestible. If a liquid is heated and the flour and butter added after rubbing to a smooth paste the butter is not made so hot.

A better way than all, when fine points of digestibility are to be considered as in the sick room, is to add the thickening agent to the liquid and cook twenty minutes then add the given amount of butter and when melted and well beaten in, take from the fire.

The novice in cooking may not know that there is a difference in the thickening power of flour, cornstarch, arrow root and browned flour. Browned flour is partly changed to dextrine and in that form has little thickening quality so much more must be taken than of ordinary flour which is more commonly used for thickening. Cornstarch is stronger than wheat flour and one-half as much should be taken as of flour. Arrow root, the purest form of starch, must be taken even more sparingly than cornstarch.

Pleasant News for Author.

Women Little Thought Of.

Among some Brazilian tribes it is believed that the presence of women will hinder wine from fermenting. In Nulgha should a woman happen to touch or sit near an object put under talism, and rendered sacred and invaluable because of its contact with man, it cannot be further made use of, and she has to pay the penalty with her life in consequence. In Tahiti women must respect the places resorted to by men, as well as their fishing tackle and weapons.—North American Review.

The Crown Of Womanhood

"Uncared for hair cannot be beautiful. There is no part of the human makeup so revengeful as the hair. It cries out; Look at me; care for me, or I will disgrace you; Treat me with consideration and I will be a glory to you."

With the above words Lillian Russell, an unquestioned authority on feminine attractiveness, places no uncertain value on nice hair as a beauty asset. Unkept, untidy hair not only cannot be attractive but is actually a disgrace.

But why have illkept, untidy hair? By devoting a few moments regularly to brushing and intelligent application of NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE, the hair may be made to yield wonderful returns in increased personal charm.

Dandruff, which is due to a germ or microbe, is the direct cause of more hair trouble than anything else. The hair becomes thin, harsh, uneven and falls out in quantities. It looks dead and lifeless; there is no luster. The scalp itches.

HERPICIDE will destroy this dandruff germ that is causing all the trouble, cleans the scalp, gives the hair life, snap and luxuriance. The hair stops coming out, the itching ceases almost at once, and withal there is a most gratifying sense of cleanliness.

To the woman who wishes to make the most of nature's gifts by having fluffy beautiful hair, NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE is a tollat necessity. It is exquisitely perfumed and is a delightful hair-dressing.

"WINDINGS OF THE VAN LOONS" Leave it to Father to know how to do things.

THE WAY OF A MAN

By EMERSON HOUGH

Copyright, 1907, by the Oatling Publishing Company

Belknap laughed long and hard at this old trapper's yarn, and, weak as I was myself, I was disposed to join him. Orme was the only one who did not ridicule the story. Auberry himself was disgusted at the meriment. "I know you wouldn't believe it," he said. "There is no use telling a parcel of londesfeet anything they can't see for themselves. But I could tell you a heap more things. Why, I have seen their buffalo hunters kill a thousand buffalo right in from the plains and over the edge of a cut bank where they'd pitch down and bust themselves to pieces. I can show you bones of a hundred such places. Buffalo don't die that when they are alone—they have got to be killed, I tell you. "Injuns can talk with other animals—they can call them others too. I have seen an old medicine man right out on the plain ground in the middle of the village go to dance, and I have seen him call three full sized beavers right up on the ground—see them with my own eyes, I tell you. Yes, and I have seen them three old beavers stand right there turn into full grown old men, gray haired. I have seen 'em sit down at a fire and smoke, too, and finally get up when they get through and clean out—just disappear back into the ground. Now, how you all explain them there things? I don't pretend to say, but there can't be no man call me a liar, for I need 'em and seed 'em unmistakable."

Belknap and the others only smiled, but Orme turned soberly toward Auberry. "I don't call you a liar, my man," said he. "On the contrary, what you say is very interesting. I quite believe it, although I never knew before that your natives in this country were possessed of these powers."

"It ain't all of 'em can do it," said Auberry. "Only a few men of a few tribes can do them things, but them that can shore can, and that's all I know about it."

"Quite so," said Orme. "Now, as it chances, I have traveled a bit in my time in the old countries of the east. I have seen some wonderful things done there."

"I have read about the East Indian jugglers," said Belknap, interested. "Tell me, have you seen those feats? And are they feats or simply lies?"

"They are actual occurrences," said Orme. "I have seen them with my own eyes, just as Auberry has seen the things he describes, and it is no more right to accuse the one than the other of us of untruthfulness."

"For instance, I have seen an Indian juggler take a plain bowl, much as they use for rice, and hold it out in his hand in the open sunlight, and then I have seen a little bamboo tree start in it and grow two feet high, right in the middle of the bowl, within the space of a minute or so."

"You'll talk about the old story of Jack and the Beanstalk? I have seen an old fakir take a bamboo stick no thicker than his finger and thrust it down in the ground and start and climb up, as if it were a tree, and keep on climbing till he was out of sight, and then there would come falling down out of the sky logs and trees, his head, pieces of his body. When these struck the ground they would resemble and make the man all over again—just like Auberry's dead boy, you know."

"These tricks are so common in Asia that they do not excite any wonder. As to tribal telegraph, they have got it there. Time and again when our forces were marching against the hill tribes of northwestern India we found they knew all of our plans a hundred miles ahead of us—how, none of us could tell—only that was there, plain and unmistakable."

"They never do tell," broke in Auberry. "You couldn't get a red to explain any of this to you—was, even."

"You have lived with 'em years. They certainly do stand out for keeps." "Yet once in awhile," smiled Orme in his easy way, "a white man does pick up some of these tricks. I believe I could do a few of them myself if I liked—in fact, I have sometimes learned some of the simpler ones for my own amusement."

General exclamations of surprise and doubt greeted him from our little circle, and this seemed to nuzzle him somewhat. "By Jove," he went on, "if you doubt it I don't mind trying a hand at it right now. Perhaps I have forgotten something of my old skill, but we'll see. Come, then."

All across now and gathered about him on the ground, there in the full sunlight. He evinced no uneasiness or surprise, and he employed no mechanism or deception which we could detect.

"My good man," said he to Auberry, "let me take your knife. Auberry tossed the long hunting knife at his belt and handed it to him. Taking it, Orme wanted himself cross legged on a white blanket, which he spread out on the sandy soil."

All at once Orme looked up with an expression of surprise on his face. "This was not the knife I wanted," he said. "I asked for a plain American hunting knife, not this one. See, you have given me a Malay kris! I have not the slightest idea where you got it."

We all looked intently at him. There, held up in his hand, was full proof of what he had said—a long blade of wavy steel, with a little crooked, carved handle. From what I had read I saw this to be a kris, a wavy-bladed knife of the Malays. "It did not shine or gleam in the sun, but threw back a dull reflection from its gray steel as though lead and silver mingled in its make. The blade was about thirty inches long, whereas that of Auberry's knife could not have exceeded eight inches at the most."

"We did not know you had that thing around you," exclaimed Belknap. "That is only a slight of hand."

"It is, indeed!" said Orme, smiling. "I tell you I did not have it with me. After all, you see it is the same knife."

We all gaped curiously and there, as I am a living man, we saw that wavy kris, extended in his hand, turn back into the form of the plainsman's hunting knife. A gasp of wonder and half terror came from the circle. Some of the men drew back. I heard an Irish private swear and saw him cross himself. I do not explain these things, I only say I saw them.

"I was mistaken," said Orme politely. "In offering so simple a test as this, but now, if you still think I had the kris in my clothing, how that could be, I don't know. I'm sure, and if you still wish to call my little performance a slight of hand, then I'll do something to prove what I have said and make it quite plain that all my

"I have read about the East Indian jugglers," said Belknap, interested. "Tell me, have you seen those feats? And are they feats or simply lies?"

"They are actual occurrences," said Orme. "I have seen them with my own eyes, just as Auberry has seen the things he describes, and it is no more right to accuse the one than the other of us of untruthfulness."

"For instance, I have seen an Indian juggler take a plain bowl, much as they use for rice, and hold it out in his hand in the open sunlight, and then I have seen a little bamboo tree start in it and grow two feet high, right in the middle of the bowl, within the space of a minute or so."

"You'll talk about the old story of Jack and the Beanstalk? I have seen an old fakir take a bamboo stick no thicker than his finger and thrust it down in the ground and start and climb up, as if it were a tree, and keep on climbing till he was out of sight, and then there would come falling down out of the sky logs and trees, his head, pieces of his body. When these struck the ground they would resemble and make the man all over again—just like Auberry's dead boy, you know."

"These tricks are so common in Asia that they do not excite any wonder. As to tribal telegraph, they have got it there. Time and again when our forces were marching against the hill tribes of northwestern India we found they knew all of our plans a hundred miles ahead of us—how, none of us could tell—only that was there, plain and unmistakable."

"They never do tell," broke in Auberry. "You couldn't get a red to explain any of this to you—was, even."

"You couldn't get a red to explain any of this to you—was, even."

was sitting. It studied the blanket entirely red. At this sight the entire group broke apart, only a few remaining to witness the rest of the scene.

I do not attempt to explain this illusion or whatever it was. I do not know how long it lasted, but presently, as I may testify, I saw Orme rise and kick at the wetted blood stained blanket. He lifted it heavy with dripping blood. I saw the blood fall from its corners upon the ground.

"Ah," he remarked calmly, "it's getting dry now. Here is your knife, my good fellow."

I looked about me, almost disposed to rub my eyes, as were perhaps the others of our party. The same great plains were there, the same wide shimmering stream, rippling in the sunlight, the same groups of animals grazing on the bluff, the same sentinels outlined against the sky. Over all shone the blinding light of the western midday sun. Yet as Orme straightened out this blanket it was as white as it had been before. Auberry looked at his knife blade as though he would have preferred to throw it away, but he sheathed it and it fitted the sheath as before.

Orme smiled at us all pleasantly. "Do you believe in the Indian telegraph now?" he inquired.

I have told you many things of this strange man, Gordon Orme, and I shall need to tell yet others. Sometimes my friends smile at me even yet over these things. But since that day I have not doubted the tales old Auberry told me of our own Indians. Since then, too, I have better understood Gordon Orme and his strange personality, the like of which I never knew in any land.

How long it I hardly knew, for I had sunk into a sort of dull apathy in which one day was much like another. But at last we gathered our crippled party together and broke camp, our wounded men in the wagons, and so slowly paced on westward, up the trail. We supposed, what later proved to be true, that the Sioux had ridden in the valley on both sides of us and that the scattered portions of the army had all they could do, while the freight trains were held back until the road was clear.

I wearied of the monotony of wagon travel and without counsel with any finally, weak as I was, called for my horse and rode on slowly with the walking team. I had gone for some distance before I heard hoofs on the sand behind me.

"Guess who it is," called a voice. "Don't turn your head."

"I can't turn," I answered, "but I know who it is."

She rode up alongside, where I could see her, and fair enough she was to look upon, and glad enough I was to look. She was thinner now with this prairie life, and browner, and the ends of her hair were still yellowing, like that of outdoors men. She still was booted and gloved after the fashion of civilization, and still she wore garbed in the aboriginal costume, which she filled and honored gracefully. The round cylinders on her leggings rattled as she rode.

"You ought not to ride," she said. "You are pale."

"You are beautiful," said I, "and I like because you are beautiful."

Her eyes were busy with her gloves, but I saw a sidelong glance. "I do not understand you," she said demurely.

"I could not sit back there in the wagon and think," said I, "I knew that you would be riding before long, and I guessed I might perhaps talk with you."

She bit her lip and half pulled up her horse as if to fall back. "That will depend," was her comment. But we rode on side by side, knee to knee.

Many things I had wondered, before then, for certain mysteries had come to me, as to many men, who wish logically to know the causes of great phenomena. From boyhood I had pondered many things. I had lain on my back and looked up at the stars and wondered how far they were, and how far the farthest thing beyond them was. I had wondered at that indeterminate quotient in my sums, where the same figure came, always the same, running on and on. I used to wonder what was my soul, and I fancied that it was a pale, blue flaming oblate, some here near by, back and in the middle of my body—such was my boyish guess of what they told me was a real thing. I had pondered on that compass of the skies by which the wild fowl guide themselves. I had wondered, as a child, how far the mountains ran. As I had grown older I had read the law, read of the birth of civilization, pondered on laws and customs.

Dogging that, I must know their reasons, I had read of marriages in many lands, and many times had studied into the questions of dowry and bride price, and consent of parents and consent of the bride—studied marriage as a covenant, a contract, as a human and so called divine thing. I had questioned the cause of the old myth that makes Cupid blind. I had delved deep as I might in law, and history and literature, seeking to solve, as I might—what?

Ah, witless, it was to solve this very riddle that rode by my side now, to answer the question of the Sphinx. What had come of all my studies? Not so much as I was learning now, here in the open, with this sweet savage woman whose legends linked as she rode, whose tunic swelled softly, whose jaw was clean and brown. How weak the precepts of the social covenant seemed! How feeble and far away the old world we two had known! And how infinitely sweet, how compelling, how necessary now seemed to me this new, sweet world that swept around us!

We rode on side by side, knee to knee. Her garments rustled and tinkled.

Her voice woke me from my brooding. "I wish, Mr. Cowley," said she, "that if you are strong enough and can do so without discomfort, you would ride with me each day when I ride."

"Why?" I asked. That was the wish in my own mind, but I knew her reason was not the same as mine.

"Because," she said. She looked at me, but would not answer farther. "You ought to tell me," I said quietly.

"Because it is prescribed for you."

"Not by my doctor," I shook my head. "Why, then?"

"Stupid—oh, very stupid officer and gentleman!" she said, smiling slowly. "Lieutenant Belknap has his duties to look after, and as for Mr. Orme, I am not sure he is either officer or gentleman."

She spoke quietly but positively. I looked on straight up the valley and pondered. Then I put out a hand and touched the fringe of her sleeve.

"I am going to try to be a gentleman," said I. "But I wish some fate would tell me why it is a gentleman can be made from nothing but a man."

DANGER PERIOD OF WOMAN'S LIFE FROM 45 TO 50

Interesting Experience of Two Women—Their Statements Worth Reading.

Asheville, N.C.—"I suffered for years with female trouble while going through the Change of Life. I tried a local physician for a couple of years without any substantial benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I quit my physician and commenced using it with the happiest results. I am today practically a well woman and anxious to contribute my mite towards inducing others to try your great medicine, as I am fully persuaded that it will cure the ailments from which I suffered if given a fair chance."

"If you think this letter will contribute anything towards further introducing your medicines to afflicted women who are passing through this trying period, it is with great pleasure I consent to its publication."—Mrs. JULIA A. MOORE, 17 East St., Asheville, N.C.

The Case of Mrs. Kirlin. Circleville, Ohio.—"I can truthfully say that I never had anything do me so much good during Change of Life as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

"Before I had taken one half a bottle of it I began to feel better, and I have continued taking it. My health is better than it has been for several years. If all women would take it they would escape untold pain and misery at this time of life."—Mrs. ALICE KIRLIN, 358 W. Mill St., Circleville, Ohio.

The Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. At such times women may rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

ST. PATRICK'S PARADE HELD IN NEW YORK TODAY.

Members of Irish Societies March Through Streets of Metropolis.—Reviewed by Cardinal Farley.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.) New York, March 10.—The Irish societies of the metropolis anticipated St. Patrick's Day by holding the big parade which is the spectacular feature of their annual celebration, today, an account of tomorrow being Sunday. One of the novelties in the line of march this year were the star performers of the Irish-American Athletic Club bearing the trophies and banners won by the famous athletic organization at home and abroad. The parade was reviewed by Cardinal Farley, Mayor Gaynor and other notables.
